Great feedback, Simon! Thanks a lot.

You are right, this process is about the Permission Review for access to data available via Public APIs and as such updating it based on your feedback makes total sense.

Unfortunately I am about to hit the road now and will be traveling for the next two days (Seedcamp in Berlin), is it ok if we synch up on Thursday?

Thanks again,
kp

+ Monica

Hi KP – Awesome that you've been thinking about this.

In parallel, Monica and I have been working on a subset of your framing: specifically around providing a clear framework for making decisions about whitelisting apps for the newly privatized APIs. The way we're doing this is to divide up every app which is currently using to-be-privatized APIs into four buckets, and to subdivide into segments from there:

- 1/ Games – Namita, Gareth etc
- 2/ Mobile/Carrier/Device/OEM – Peter Kang, Vikas etc – Samsung, Nokia, HTC, Vodafone etc
- 3/ PMD/Marketers – solutions engineering / PMD team etc – Nanigans, Coke etc
- 4/ Non-games – essentially everything else – i.e. Our Team – Messaging apps

We've scoped this work specifically to the to-be-privatized APIs (read_stream, friends_* perms) - we're not covering the permissions/APIs which continue to be public (friends, login etc).

We're at the stage where each of four groups is going off and defining their criteria for exempting or extending an app from PS12n deprecations. Monica is leading this work.

It feels to me that we should separate the work around whitelisting apps for newly private APIs from the work to decide who gets access to the public features of platform: login, friends list. To me, the people we'll be considering for private APIs are those developer who are allowed to use the public APIs.

To that end, I'd rescope this deck specifically around the Unified Review process – i.e. A framework for making decisions about how we decide who gets access to which PUBLIC APIs.

Lets also not frame using the word 'partner' as that is a phase we should reserve for those apps which have access to private APIs – lets just call this Apps.

Given that this is really about Unified Review policies, suggest you make this a co-production with someone from DevOps/Policy - who from that team have you worked with on this yet?

Want to do a quick call today to sync?

Hello Simon,

As you know with PS12n, the intention is to review (and approve/reject) all permissions a developer requests from users.

I think it will be helpful to create a framework that our devops would use to classify the app under one of the following buckets:

- 1/ Competitive
- 2/ Potentially competitive
- 3/ Aligned
- 4/ Partner (contract)

Given you have been running point on PS12n and have a much better context, I was wondering if you have time to review the process/classification criteria suggested in the attached before we can circulate it with product for their input. Eddie suggested this would be useful for him when he talks to Doug about who should be approved for certain permissions and who shouldn't.

Thanks a lot,
kp

Eddie, do let me know if it would be more convenient to have a quick chat this morning instead since you are off the hook from the developer conference.

Cheers,

Hello Eddie,

I was wondering if could share your thoughts on this one below.

I need to make a recommendation to Ime/Chris on how to deal with Linkedin and your input is super valuable to formulate our approach.

Thanks a lot,

Subject: The Linkedin scenario

Hello Eddie,

As you may recall, we had a chat a few days back on how best to deal with Linkedin going forward. I need to understand a few things with regards to your current thinking about Unified Review, PS12n and how the “competitive businesses” will be treated, in order to decide whether we should take action now or leave it for later PS12n comes to light. Namely:

1. Are we deprecating the ability for developers to access work history generally?

My current understanding is that this won't be deprecated, but depending on the use case under which the data is used, we can allow devs to access work history as part of the Unified Review.

2. Is PS12N changing the definition of what is competitive today?

This is grey area for me. Last time we talked, the plan was not ready to be distributed to a wider audience, but could you give me an idea of what constitutes competitive and how are we planning to treat them differently? I.e less permissions, restrict access to APIs, block them all together, etc.

3. How specifically will PS12n impact LinkedIn?

If none of the above 2 will apply to Linkedin, do you foresee them being affected somehow?

Just fyi, when the DevOps team reviewed Linkedin recently for me, there could not find a noticeable Policy Violation that would allow us to block them from accessing sensitive data. In terms of the plan, my current thinking is to allow them to use the data but push them into a direction where:

- 1/ User changing jobs and announcing that on Linkedin will be able to share on FB
- 2/ User's being promoted and changing titles on Linkedin will be able to share on FB
- 3/ Other lifetime events, such as Education History, Qualifications, etc should be shared on FB

At this point of time, sharing a status update posted on LinkedIn to FB is not good enough for me, but is deemed good enough in terms of reciprocity.

Thanks a lot,
kp

[I missed the last one. So this will include 2 weeks worth of update. Normal service will resume. Some really high impact stuff by the team.]

Goodbye Jermiah!: Friday is Jeremiah's last day at FB :(.

Content production (Ram/Pinkesh): We had a really good review with Chris Cox and co. This was the first milestone for our "understand content production" task force. There are some really interesting findings in the 70 slide deck attached in the email. I recommend a read. We will also be holding sessions where we go through this. For the sake of brevity, the three main slides are:

People are sharing less than they did in 2012 – but more importantly they are sharing drastically different types of content

VOLUME SUMMARY – WE'RE FALLING BECAUSE...

- Bulk photos are falling due to mobile migration (and we don't get enough single photos to compensate)
- Wall posts are falling due to mobile migration because of falling Profile visits, less prominent wall composer and no (or poor) in feed birthday unit

WUC SUMMARY – WE'RE FALLING BECAUSE...

- Text posts are falling because they haven't been supported (or defended) by any team and have been cannibalized by re-shares and photos
- Wall posts are falling due to mobile migration because of falling Profile visits, less prominent wall composer and no (or poor) in feed birthday unit

Privacy and Trust (Sandeep):

1. Sandeep did some real good work in building a flexible framework to weight survey results, and extend the data infrastructure to account for all sentiment questions (and not just trust). Once we figure out "Cares about me" it is a 2 min job to ensure the data flows into the dashboard. Link here
2. The positive bump in the trust score by lookback videos has persisted well over three weeks now in the major countries like U.S., U.K. and Brazil. This is probably the first case we noticed where the positive impact of product launch/event has persisted for so long. The trust trend in the US is appended below.

Videos (Nick): Nick has been doing some really good work on videos.

- Comscore recently indicated that FB video consumption increased by 85% from Dec 13 to Jan 14! Nick did an analysis around internal data to confirm, and explain, what is happening. In summary, our internal data lines up very closely with the Comscore data which shows a massive 85% increase in time spent watching videos. This jump is fairly consistent across both android and iPhone. No smoking gun but details here
- Analysis of FB10 videos: Details here. This was a quick analysis on how "big" FB10 videos where. Summary
 - ~175 M FB10 look back videos were viewed (watched for longer than 3 s)
 - ~20 M hrs were spend watching the FB10 videos in Feb (15% of total time spent watching user generated videos and 5% of overall time spent watching videos)
 - ~325 M people watched an FB10 video
 - ~150 M people watched their own video
 - FB10 videos got more likes, but less comments than other user produced videos in Feb
 - ~ 6 M videos were deleted

Low end devices (Benedict):

Multi-interface analysis: Benedict did some really good fundamental work in understanding and demystifying multiple-interface. This was extremely impactful as it helped the M-Web photos team identify the correct interface to focus on. Detailed deck here Key insights:

- A significant proportion (28% of WAU) access FB through more than 1 mobile interface in a week. However, 90% of these users produce content on only 1 interface.
- MTouch and iPad are secondary interfaces. When a users uses mTouch and iPad in conjunction with any other interface, the user is more likely to produce content on the other interface.
- People generally use mBasic as their primary interface
- A very cool thing that we observed was that. People who use Snaptu and mBasic, do all the "lightweight" content production like posting texts and reshares on Snaptu but go to mBasic to upload photos. People who use mBasic and Android, do all the "lightweight" content production like posting texts and reshares on mBasic but go to Android to upload photos.

Content production in groups: Benedict, with Dan's help, did an analysis on how users produce content in groups across multiple interfaces, with an emphasis on mBasic. The analysis led to a short term fix to expose photo uploads in the mBasic groups composer, plus a longer term exploration to include groups in the audience selection of composer.

- mBasic users have the highest mobile participation rate in groups, but they are posting less photos in these groups than iPhone and Android
- Only 4% of mBasic photos uploaded are uploaded into groups, compared to 8% on iPhone and 11% on Webloader
- Increase in participation rate from current 0.032 to 0.05 will boost mBasic group photos by 55.4% and overall mBasic photos by 2.4%

Composer (Santosh): Santosh completed the analysis of External Entry Points (EEP) into Composer last week. EEPs are places e.g. photo gallery from where one enters composer directly

- On Android, # of entered to composer from EEP is comparable to timeline (~11-12% posts).
- External entries have much higher completion rates
- Whatsapp accounts for 0.5% of all composer entries on FB!
- Product Change Proposal: Introducing entry point from FB Messenger on Android should increase content production by +0.4-0.7% on Android. Since the content is primarily photos, it should be a significant win for photos WUC!

Subject: Sharing Metrics Weekly Update

[Main highlights]

Videos (Nick): We did our first understand analysis on videos content production to understand who is producing videos that "matter". Details here. Lots of stuff but the highlights

- More videos are produced by users, but videos from pages drive significantly more views
- Vast majority of user videos get < 10 viewers
- People with a lot of friends (400+) produce most of the videos and an even higher proportion of views
- US users produces a disproportionately high number of videos
- Community pages produce the most videos that lead to an even higher percentage of views

Content production (Kyle): Kyle looked at when user post after they open the app. Do they post immediately or do they spend time in newsfeed/other places before the post. This is important to understand for Muse, where we will trigger users with reminders in feed. Details here

- For 66% of our photo/checkin sessions the user enters the composer within 1 minute of app opening. This implies that people open the app to post photos and checkins!
- Interestingly, it is different for text posts. Only 33% of people that click on status before 60 seconds.

Offline Posting (Santosh): Details here. Offline posting attempts to allow users to post and succeed even without network connection. This features prompts the user to continue to post even without connectivity and once they post ensures it post eventually succeeds even if this happens numerous retries and hours later.

1. Santosh identified that posts that depend on connectivity for right rendering (preview for reshares, suggestion for tags/checkins etc) have high cancellation rates . The team is figuring out if with the correct "messaging" we can reduce cancellations and get these users to post.
2. Santosh also identified that about 5% posts have only server success but no client side success, i.e., the users does not know the post has succeeded. The team identified that this was because we were not waiting long enough at the client end for server confirmation. This will be resolved soon.

Subject: Sharing Metrics Weekly Update

Pretty good 2 weeks with lots of awesome stuff by the team. I feel like we are now slowly generating useful/actionable insights (simple picker analysis, photos consumption, offline posting) that can inform the product team.

Content Production (Nick, Tye, Benedict, Ram): We had a very good review with Will, KX, Julie and co where we discussed our progress on the content production narrative. Detailed deck here. This is still WIP and we are continue to iterate and improve our understanding.

- Impact of Shift to mobile on content production:
 - We confirmed that the drop in web is primarily due to users acquiring phones by looking at a set of web-only users who have never got a phone
 - What happens when a web user gets a phone? His/her web DAU drops and Web cp/dau on web drops across all content types Interestingly, if we look at overall content/dau, we see a drop only for Reshares and Bulk Photos. We DO NOT see a drop for text posts and single photos. This means that the shift to mobile does not affect text posts and single photos. We can all see this from the fact that cp/dau for single photos/text posts on mobile ~ the value on web.
- Why is Andrioid on a rocket ship while iPhone is flat? Android is up 28% while iPhone is -5% on WUC. This is a difference of 33% in growth between the two platforms.
 - We have confirmed this is not due to the standard demographics, I.e., there are more users from Brazil/13-18 etc. on Android. We also see this across high end/low end Android and all screen sizes.
 - Much larger portion of Android is new users compared to iPhone. New users in general post more content than old users. This explains about 7% of the difference
 - Users who migrate to Android from Web/Other platforms produce more than the average on Android. Thus the migration to Android push the overall cp/dau by 10% up. his pushed iPhone down by –8%. The users migrating to Android used to produce more content on Web (even before migration) than users who migrate to iPhone. This means that users migration from other platforms explain almost half of the difference in growth rates between Android and iPhone.

Simple Picker Analysis (Kyle): Full details here. Kyle did some very good analysis on figuring out how the user navigation has changed from multi picker to simple picker.

- Composer abandonment (exit out of the app), which reflects the most dramatic dissatisfaction with the interface, is down 12% with simple picker.
- Cancels tend to happen later in the session, on the composer screen rather than in the picker itself when the user gets to see the image in full. This suggests that potential uploaders are dissatisfied with image quality on lux usage. I found that 8% of people who reach the gallery screen try lux, and nearly half of those end up taking it off. So there is demand for image enhancement, but it is not being satisfied by the current feature. Since there's a 3% difference in post rate between people who click on the lux button and others who reach the same screen, we may be able to increase post rate by up to 3% if that feature were living up to expectations.
- With the move to simplepicker, we're also reducing the number of people who make it to the gallery screen where tagging, filters, and lux happen, which increases the potential impact of auto-tagging and auto-enhancement (if lux quality improves to the point that more people would want it on).

How do users consume photos on Web? (Jeremiah) We completed this and presented this to the entire team. Details here. There is a lot of good stuff in there. Main highlights.

- We found that more than 80% of photos viewed on timeline are more than 30 days old, but these photos receive feedback only 10% as often as recent photos and photos from News Feed. So WUF does not completely represent photos consumption and we should track photo views (unique ds, userid, photo_id) pairs as well.
- We found that 30-60% of photos consumption occurs in Snowlift. We also found that snowlift sessions are often long, with the median number of profile photos viewed per session = 6, and the average 10.5 So we recommended that the Photos team add pivots to Snowlift to keep users browsing longer.
- We found that only 10% of photo tab views are self, and the rest are friends or FoFs. We are going to dig a bit more into this before recommending action.

Breakfast club and tagging: (Santosh) : One of the issues with BClub was reduction in user tagging which in turn reduced the WUC. Digging into data revealed that even though the # of status updates have remained same for test and control at ~2.3M, the # of status updates with custom privacy has increased by 87K whereas the tags have reduced by 61K. This we believe explains the reduction in tagging if:

1. User sets of BClub’s privacy settings mostly overlaps with users of tagging
2. Users of BClub privacy settings consider tagging redundant because they are already directing their status updates at the users whom they would have sought through tagging earlier.

Offline Posting: (Santosh) Initial analysis revealed that share posts had much lower posting rate than text posts. After some investigation, we identified that this was because "resharing" involves scraping which in turn requires connectivity_ Consequently, users got a poor error messaged and canceled out. We believe that changing the message from the current "Preview Unavailable" to "Preview will be added when you post" will increase the posting rate.

Subject: Sharing Metrics Weekly Update

We figured it was efficient for each time to post the metrics. update to the relevant group.

How do users view photos on Web?

Jeremiah made some good progress on this. We should wrap this up in the next week or so. The main narrative we have so far is:

- Timeline drives O(50%) and feed O(30%) of traffic to snow lift. WUF/Impression when snow lift is opened from timeline < when snow lift is opened from feed. This supports our thesis that "WUF does not capture all the consumption value in photos".
- Photos tab redesign: 45% of the time a user views the timeline of a FOF, 45% a friends and 9% of the time a user views his own timeline. So the redesign has to focus on the main use case, which is viewing somebody else's timeline

Trust

- Audience Alignment and Awareness (AAA): If you take current public posters and ask them who would they prefer to share with, then 55% of them say public. (55% alignment), We launched the following product which prompts you to select an audience when you open the composer and hopefully align you <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kVvQ>. If you just take the raw results then the alignment goes up to 75% (+ 20%). Pinkesh dug into this further and showed that there are a significant number of people who dismiss the dialogue (20%) or just escape from the composer (30%). So if you ignore them, the alignment shoots up to 83% (+28%). The Privacy sentiment number is up by 4% +/- 2% and Trust is pretty flat.

Content Production:We now have triangle charts for all the dimensions that matter here. https://tableau-dev.thefacebook.com/views/ContentProd_TriangleChart/Triangle#1 Using this, we have started answering a few important questions.

Why are wall posts dropping?

- New users use the product less than the older users.
- On Web, some product change around Jan 7-10 really caused a drop in directed wall posts.
- On Mobile, we see a decrease in usage for a users with FB age

Why is Android photos/dau increasing while iPhone is flat?

- Android is increasing across the board. Upload/Rate for users who joined FB in 2012 is increasing. The users who we have added recently have an even higher upload rate. Some product change in August had a big impact
- Iphone is pretty interesting. Upload/Rate for users who joined FB in 2012 is increasing. There is really no difference between the users we added in 2012 and 2013.

Infrastructure:

- Thanks to work done by Elizabeth on the BI team we know have the videos dash where the main metrics are being tracked. There is still someway to go: https://tableau.thefacebook.com/views/video_playback/Dash
- We are now measuring upload reliability in a consistent manner across photos, videos and the overall composer.
- Survey Concatenation: Towards the end of August 2013, we switched from ‘Legacy’ survey tool to ‘Simon’ Survey tool and also changed few questions in main tracking survey. Therefore in order to obtain a long term trend we made an adjustment on legacy survey scores to sync it with simon survey scores (the current version). The long duration of data gives us tremendous insights on seasonality and long term trends like discussed in research section.

Analysis Highlights

What does trust affect?

So far: We are seeing that trust seems to impact our major metrics like dau in a minor way. The impact is small and most product changes would have much higher impact. However, trust is significantly correlated with interactions that users have with facebook. If we are asking them to give us permission to install apps (platform apps) or Socrates (where we ask users to fill in their profile info), then trust is a much bigger driver, comparable to a lot of demographic variables.

Pinkesh next looked at how trust correlates with Profile completeness. As we can see from the picture, there are significant differences in the "profile completeness" between users who do not trust us versus users who trust us. Profile completeness is pretty important and we spend a LOT of effort (Socates) getting people to fill in their profiles. Further, some fields such as "mobile" (phone numbers) are crucial to products like messenger.

This is further evidence that points to the following narrative on trust: Trust does not matter so much when users use Facebook as a conduit to communicate with their friends or the public. But it matters a lot whenever users interact with Facebook the entity.
Detailed note here: <https://www.facebook.com/notes/pinkesh-patel/impact-of-trust-sentiment-part-ii/10152171907894539>

Low-end devices analysis: The goal of this analysis is to identify if there is an opportunity with the low end interfaces (Low end Android, Mbasic and Mtouch). Benedict, who is back from bootcamp, did some very quick analysis to scope out the opportunities in low-end interfaces. Main conclusions:

- Content production in Low end Android ~ High End Android.
- Mbasic/Mtouch/Snaptu users have really low reshares/dau. It is not clear why this should happen

We will continue to work on this.

		Low End Android*	High End Android	Android Overall	mBasic	mTouch	Snaptu	Iphone	Web
Content/DAU	Photos		0.40	0.43	0.42	0.12	0.12	0.11	0.28	0.48
	Posts		0.28	0.26	0.27	0.25	0.16	0.39	0.22	0.30

Subject: Re: Sharing Analytics Weekly Update

[Will restrict the weekly update to 3-4 items to make it more readable]

Photos Needy User Experiment Analysis: (Kyle) Details here. When users who have not posted photos in the last 2 weeks, posts a photo we boost the user in the feed and drive a feedback to the user. Does the increased feedback increase participation rate? We had seen that overall the test group got 17% more impression, 5% more feedback and this caused a 0.2% increase in PR. Kyle dived into the test to see if there were some specific buckets where this had a bigger effect. For users with > 100 friends, the impact is bigger and is 0.40%.

Composer waterfall dashboard: (Santosh/JonW) We finally have a clean working, reasonable fast dashboard that tracks composer "cancellation rates" and reliability. This has been in the works for sometime and thanks to Santosh/Jon for finishing this. <https://fburl.com/16045388>.

The end goal is to have one consolidated view of the composer waterfall and reliability across all Photos, Videos and Composer team.

Trust drop in Brazil: (Sandeep) Being the second largest country by DAU and by having 10% of contribution to total survey responses, Brazil is a key country from “trust” perspective. Trust in Brazil had been dropping consistently over the last one year with YOY drop of -30% and the very recent drop was particularly alarming (-2% WOW). Sandeep worked on identifying the main buckets where trust had been declining at a faster rate. The summary of my analysis/findings was as follows:

1. We know it from the survey data that android users in general tend to trust us less than the average facebook user. Recently we have seen a surge in android respondents in Brazil whose proportion among total survey respondents had grown from 6.5% in September to 15% as of Jan 15th.
2. Steady decline in trust among users under the age of 25.
3. Continuous decline is trust among users who had been on Facebook for less than a year and a sharp dip in last week among users with vintage of 1-2 years.

Detailed report <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kTHT>.

What does trust affect?

So far: We are seeing that trust seems to impact our major metrics like dau in a minor way. The impact is small and most product changes would have much higher impact. However, trust is significantly correlated with interactions that users have with facebook. If we are asking them to give us permission to install apps (platform apps), then trust is a much bigger driver, comparable to a lot of demographic variables. Now, Pinkesh looked into whether trust is correlated with Socrates (where we ask users to fill in their profile info). Taking into account most of the demographic variables that we measure, trust is a major driver of Socrates participation and answer rates.

The participation rate is defined as the number of people who answered at least one question on Socrates (in the last 3 months, over our entire data). The participation rate overall shows a 4% difference between the two extremes overall. Given that Socrates helps us move Profile Completeness numbers by a few percent each half, this is a pretty significant difference. So the main emerging themes seems to be: We provide a valuable service which supersedes trust concerns when people want to keep in touch with their friends or use our products. But when people interact with us, FB, as an entity, like Socrates/App Install Perms then trust shows up.

Metrics:

There are still some missing numbers and we are working on getting them filled. We will also add the main video metrics to this report in the next few weeks.

Date: Jan 12 2014

Trust (01/19/2014)

Metric: % Top Two Respondents (7 day avg.)

Dash: <https://fburl.com/16043521>

Goal: 37%

Value: 32.46% (WOW: -0.78% & MOM: -1.36%)

Commentary:

Majority of drop in trust last week can be attributed to top three countries by DAU i.e. USA (-2.5% WOW), Brazil (-1.7% WOW) and India (-2.6% WOW). Fortunately the impact of the significant drop in these countries was mitigated by sharp recovery in UK (+7.2% WOW) and Germany (+3.23% WOW). While the drop in Brazil has been steep.

We are digging into this further and we should have a coherent picture on what are the main drivers of the drops are. Brazil, we have identified is one main driver (see analysis above).

- Drop in content production on iPhone and Android across both photos and posts. We want to see if this sustains.
- Increase of a 5% YOY on photos x Web. This was around the time last year when we had logging changes on Web and we stopped counting unpublished photos.

- I am off to Kauai for the rest of the week! :D

Content Production:

Trust

Metric: % Top two responders (7day average)
Dash: www.fburl.com/trustdash
Goal: 39%
Metric: 32.46% (w.w -1.8%)
Commentary: The WOW drop was mainly due to a correction from the holiday high. We believe the trust scores were high during the holidays because of a shift in the composition of responders and not because users trust us more. Specifically, survey representation from US and Brazil, countries that consistently rate us low, dropped by 4.8% and 11%, respectively. Further, if we restrict only to the US the trust score is flat and shows no holiday effect.

Metric: WUC (text penalty excluded)*
Overall WUC YOY has not changed significantly from week ago. However, there are some significant movers¹.
- Reshare: The biggest mover is reshares. 12% increases WOW. Looking at the trends the growth does not seem normal and we need to investigate.
- Photos: YOY changed from -4.7% to -3% and is primarily driven by gain on Android and Msite.
- Posts: YOU changed from -18% to -21%.

¹ Going forward we will have a more detailed narrative around content production movements.
* Metric excludes the "No Text" penalty. We started logging this only in November 2013. Including this will mess up the YOY

Quarter Goals

Working with the XFN, we now have very clear quarterly goals for each analyst. We have committed to a set of standard operational goals and a set of research questions that we will answer by the end of the quarter. Details here: <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kSbT> This is an objective way to evaluate how we are performing as a team.

Content Production [BI + Ram]:

- Dash: https://our.intern.facebook.com/intern/data/portal/sharing/weighted_user_content We have a minimum viable dash up with correct and upto data. This was a massive effort and required multiple iterations. Really proud of the speed on this dash.
- WUC 2.0:
 - We recomputed the weights of WUC after fixing (a) The way we accounted for bulk uploads (b) Including minutiae. he results where much more intuitive. Details here <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kSbW>
 - Single upload earlier had no additional weights. It now gets a weight of 0.60.
 - Bulk uploads, independent of the size, had the same weights. In this run, they nicely and evenly spread out.
 - Minutae has a positive weight.

We have now changed the WUC formula to reflect these weights.

- The weights are steady over time. Here we computed the weights from data from non-overlapping intervals. <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kSbV>
- We computed three variations:
 - When we split out people tags into xy tags, with tags and mentions we observed that the weights for the three we in the same range. Therefore, xy tags, with tags and mentions are equally effective in driving feedback
 - Sarah Tolman (Distribution team) tried investigated the effect of audience size on weights. We did this in two ways:
 - Friend count to the model (credit Sarah Tolman), it had a significant impact in the weights. Photos and videos become more valuable, and re-shares become less valuable.
 - Regressing against WUF/VPV instead of WUF. WUF/VPV is a much better indicator of quality than WUF.

A clear take away is that audience size does have a significant effect. Photos/Videos become more valuable and reshares less valuable. To avoid churn, we will account for audience size when we do WUC 3.0 (og actions edition)

Trust [Sandeep + Bryan]

- Sandeep has been doing really good work in building some basic data infrastructure. We know have a shiny new dash (amazing visualization by Bryan). He is iterating to get in the right metrics. Link here: <https://our.intern.facebook.com/intern/data/portal/sharing/trust> Again I believe we have a minimum viable dash and we will keep iterating till it reaches steady state
- Weighted Survey Scores: Due to variation in response tendencies to surveys among different demographics and other factors, raw aggregates of survey results are almost always biased. To account for this we use a weighted score. Sandeep has been working on getting in two types of weights.
 - Weight calculated by Dean Eckles using logistic net on numerous parameters such as country, engagement level, interface, cohort, gender etc.
 - As simple approach using just country and interface as parameters.

Photos Production [Kyle]

- Android Uptick in PR towards the end of the year: We have seen Android PR YOY change by 10% towards the end of the year. Kyle, did a cohort analysis, between 3.9 and 3.8 to show that the 3.9 clearly increased PR by 10%. This analysis is pretty crucial because we were not sure if we really hit the goals for H2 2013 or if the increase was "seasonal". With this we are sure, it is changes rolled out in 3.9 that caused the uptick.
- Needy User Experiment Analysis: To understand whether driving feedback to occasional photo up loaders will drive more content production we ran an experiment where we boosted a set of users in the newsfeed. Kyle found that there was a small but statistically significant increase in photos PR (0.2%) for needy users who had their photos boosted. Furthermore, that increase appeared despite only a 1.4% increase in the feedback over test over control and a 7% increase in impression for the test over control. The next step is to figure out if we can do anything to drive more traffic to these users and see if the 0.2% increases to something more meaningful.
- Simple Picker Experiment Analysis: In the A/B test, Simple picker has shown a drop in total number of uploads. Kyle has been working to figure out what exactly is happening. So far he has disproved the initial hypothesis that the issue is with multi-photo posts, since single-photo posts are down more in the test group.

Subject: RE: Sharing Analytics Weekly Update

Highlights: None. Slow week. And things in progress.

Content Production [BI + Ram]: The focus is on being ready for H1 2014 by Jan 1st. We should be ready by then. This involves:

- Clean and correct data in the dashboard
- Tracking WUC for the holdout
- WUC in Deltoid

We hit some blocks but we will continue to iterate. We should be in a good place by the end of this week

Photos Production [Kyle]: We noticed an uptick in Android PR. Kyle has been investigating this. We are pretty certain this has to do with Android 3.9 but not sure what specifically in the app. Kyle is working on a cohort analysis to confirm this. See here for a plot <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kQX0>

Trust [Sandeep]: Working on operationalizing the weighted scores. The diff is out and we should be in a good place by end of this week.

Content Production [Ram]:

We had a Cox Review to set our H1 goals and also present our early findings on explaining the trends in content production. Detailed deck here <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kPXq> Main highlights

- We agreed to set a target goal of +3% WUC above projection for H1 2014. We agreed that we can change the goal as we start to understand the ecosystem better — but only up into the middle of January, after which we should consider the goal locked down.
- Overall WUC is down 13%. The biggest contributor is text posts (down 20%) which contributes 6%. Detailed breakdown of text posts here

- We now have an brand new shiny dashboard that tracks WUC!<https://tableau.thefacebook.com/views/WeightedUserContent/Dash> thank to awesome work by Jon.

Composer [Santosh]: As a part of the composer waterfall understand, we investigated cancellations and precisely tried to quantify cancellations that are not real opportunities. We removed cancellations that fell into the following buckets:

- a. Canceled the post in <5 sec?
- b. Did not show intent, i.e., did not write at least 5 chars and/or attached a photo/checkin etc.
- c. Posted in next 1 hour?

We estimated 35% real opportunity in Canceled Posts. +10% Overall Increase in Posting Possible.

- Nick Tomko joins the team and has started bootcamp. Once he graduates, he will work on content production and/or trust.
- Jeremiah is back from his vacation and is working on Consumption.
- Sandeep has joined the team on trust and has already managed to make himself useful. He is off to data camp this week.
- Delyan from BI rocked thanksgiving by backpopulating years of content prod data!
- Interesting snippets in red.

Photos Production [Kyle]:

" How often and why do users churn/resurrect on photos?" [Kyle] This week we started by getting the basic growth accounting #s. 23% of uploaders in a given month churn next month!

- $MAU(t) = MAU(t-28) + resurrect + new - churn$
- $103 = 100 \text{ (base)} + 29 \text{ (resurrect)} + 1 \text{ (new)} - 27 \text{ (churn)}$

We broke the churn and resurrect numbers down further to distinguish churn and resurrection for just photos versus all Facebook.

- $29 \text{ (resurrect)} = 23 \text{ (active)} + 6 \text{ (inactive)}$
- $27 \text{ (churn)} = 24 \text{ (active)} + 3 \text{ (inactive)}$

Here Resurrected active = Use was MAU on T-28 and T, and photo resurrected and Churn active = Use was MAU on T-28 and T, and photo churned. Among active Facebook users, churn is actually higher than resurrection, meaning that photos is shrinking among users who are active in the period T-56, T. This week, we will be digging into these numbers to understand what causes users to resurrect and churn. This is a continuous month long process.

Composer [Santosh]:

"What are the opportunities in the composer waterfall?" [Santosh]

- Goals, Metrics & Roadmap: We spent a lot of time using our understanding of composer to develop the H1 goals, metrics & roadmap which we then presented to Chris Cox. We used the following methodology:
 - a. Define the Composer Formula as $Entries (E) * Posts (P) * Successes (S) * Weights (W)$
 - b. Identified the above factors that will be impacted by each of our efforts such as offline postings, server hardening etc.
 - c. Quantified the impact based on data collected. Also, applied discounts for risk factors such as resource constraints etc.
 - d. Finally, combined it together to come with our overall goals and priorities for H1.

Based on this we identified the our priorities for H1 (in bold in the slide below):

Trust:

"What happens when users loose trust? How does it matter?" [Pinkesh]

Last week Pinkesh looked at how trust scores affect "deactivations" and Pinkesh showed that there was a correlation. Next he investigated platform apps installs. These are apps which require you to give some sort of permission to the app in order for them to function on your account. These are all sorts of apps, ranging from games to sports related to pages. We looked at how many platform apps did a person install in 3 months following a survey.

- We found that trust has a powerful correlation with the number of apps being installed. <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kMR9> This shows a clear trend with "sentiment" and specifically trust.
- We also did a breakdown by App type and we found that a similar trend exists in all app types - <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kMRf>
- We also did a breakup in app installs by interface and country and we found an interesting split between the high-GDP countries and low-GDP countries. This might possibly be due to feature phone usage (but restricting to people who have mobile_l28 = 0) preserves the trends. <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kMRc>

In conclusion trust does seem to impact platform app installs. Users who trust FB less install fewer apps. (caveat here is being another factor that impacts both, but it does not seem to be any of the usual demographic variables, delineating this is ongoing work). Also there seem to be country level differences in that trust means different things to different people.

Content production:

"How is content production/WUC trending and why is it trending that way?" We are constructing a complete story on how WUC has been changing, identifying opportunities.

- We have WUC calculated for the last two years. Full plot here <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kP4n>. Overall WUC is down 13%.
- We are starting our understand roadmap with "text posts". Main results: Text posts is dropping at -15%. This contributes to a 6% drop in overall WUC. We are still working on and refining our understanding, and this is WI

	Posts/DAU	Post/DAU YOY (Nov)
Overall	0.40	-17.5%
Web	0.35	-17.5%
Android	0.27	15%
Iphone	0.23	-12.5%
Msite	0.35	-27.5%

Web

- Steady drop in both Posts/Producer (~5% YOY) and Producer/DAU (~15% YOY)
- LATAM > APAC = NA > 1.2 x WE. Steady decline across regions.

Android

- Dropping till October 2012. Since then roughly flat till Septmeber 2013. Then sharp growth. Content/Producer and PR are relatively flat from Oct 2012 to Sep 2013. Step change after that is drive by.
- Trends are similar across countries. NA > LATAM > APAC > WE
- All the age brackets including youth's are increasing

Iphone

- Drop from 2012 Jan to 2012 Aug. Step change up in Aug 2012 from Wilde. Steady drop since then. Both PR and Posts/Poster are dropping equally and have the same pattern
- It is consistent across all regions. The effect seems to be mild on APAC (which is actually up YOY after IOS6/Harrison release). NA > LATAM = APAM > WE
- Almost all the drops are on 13-18 and 18-24. In fact, the other age brackets are increasing!

Msite

- Msite in 2012 had a Posts/DAU that was close to 2 X Web! (Logging?)
- Very steady decline in Posters/DAU. Posts/Poster was steady till Aug 2013 and then started declining
- NA > LATAM > APAC > WE
- Youths have 2 X the Content/DAU on Msite compared to every other age bracket in every other interface!
- There is a small and gradual decline across all age brackets and country. But, the big dive happens around July 2013 for youths in APAC! Zero rating?

- Kyle is out of bootcamp since Monday and has started working on Photos production.
- Sandeep joins the team. He will work on trust analytics along with Pinkesh. Nick Tomko, who was scheduled to join last Monday, could not join because of VISA issues. His current estimated join data is December 2, 2013. And then bootcamp.
- Jeremiah was on PTO last week and will continue to be out. I will be out most of next week. There will be no update next week.

Photos Tagging:

New Metric: The goal of the XY tagging team is to get every person in a photo tagged. Our aim was to identify a metric that better captures this than $xy\ tags/upload$. We wanted to:

- Change numerator from XY Tags => Non-spam XY Tags: Spam is a big problem for tags. 22% (16 M) of our tags are on photos > 15 tags. These photos have only 1 M faces in them. 78% (56 M) of our tags are on photos < 15 tags. These photos have 70 M faces. To identify spam tags, we used a simple heuristic. If a photo has 5 tags more than the number of faces in it we will classify all the tags on that photo as spam. Using this heuristic we classified ~20% of all the tags as spam and removed them from the metric. We could clearly identify spikes that were spam attacks. See here: <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kMDg>. However, it did not make a material difference to the overall trends.
- Change denominator from Uploads to Faces: We effectively had to calculate faces/upload over the last 1 year. Since our face recognition system had changed significantly over the last 1 year, we ran a sampled set of photos through facer again to get a trends of the faces/photo. Contrary to what we expected, faces/photo is not a constant but changing significantly. It has increased by more than 20% on Android YOY and dropped by 6% on Web. See here. <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kMDx>
- Very pretty dashboard with new metric: <https://our.intern.facebook.com/intern/data/portal/photos/trends?tab=TagsSummary>
- Where are we net? While the exact YOY has changed, the narrative on what has happened this half has not changed. We will discuss this with the tagging team tomorrow.

	Type	H2 Start	11/17
All Mobile	XY tags / upload	-33%	~0%
	Good XY tags / Faces	-43%	-10%

Composer:

Santosh has been spending a lot of time in building a framework for the composer metrics and getting some exact numbers. This is what we will use to set the goals. We will have a global holdout (1%) and measure our performance against that set.

Composer Waterfall: We now have some more pieces of the puzzle. We will continue to fill in the blanks below. There are three steps in the waterfall.

- Composer Opens
 - 70% of the traffic comes from feed. 20% of the traffic is from timeline.
 - When users come from feed, they are more likely to hit the "Photo" button than when they come from timeline.
- Open => Post
 - Case 1: Reshares: 7% cancellation rate.
 - When you "reshare" the content is pre filled and we only need 2/3 additional clicks to complete. For other types, it is 6/10 steps.
 - Max Opportunity: O(5%)
 - Case 2: Composer and added an attachment (photo/checkin/tag): 7.5% cancellation rate
 - User has shown a lot of intent and has progressed through a lot of steps. So clearly these are not accidental clicks
 - Max Opportunity: O(3%)
 - We have removed cancels where the user comes back and posts with the next 1 hour
 - Case 3: Composer and NOT added an attachment (photo/checkin/tag): 44% cancellation rate
 - Max Opportunity: O(15%)*

- 50% of cancels that have happened in less than 5 seconds
 - 50% of users who cancel comes back and posts within the next 1 hour.
- Post => Post to Success
 - Case 1: Reshares: Failure rate of 0.5%.
 - For 3.5%, we don't know if they were failures or successes
 - Max Opportunity: Depends on what the 3.5% is
 - Case 2 and 3: Composer w/without attachment: Failure rate is 0.5%.
 - For 1.5% we don't know if they were failures or successes
 - Max Opportunity: Depends on what the 1.5% is

*: Tentative. We are working on a more accurate number

Trust:

"What happens when users loose trust? How does it matter?"

Pinkesh is focussed on answering the question. Based on the current activation/deactivation status of all survey respondents from 2012-09-01 to 2013-11-01. In the survey, we ask questions around trust, satisfaction and usefulness of FB.

- We see that people who consider FB less trustworthy deactivate at a much higher rate (with one exception)
 - See here.

<https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kMFj> Here the g reen line is the Average Deactivation rate for survey respondents. 1 – Not at all trustworthy and 5 – extremely trustworthy

- The unexplained part is the bump in deactivation rate for users who have trust score of 5. We have ruled out the theory that t hese are people who click all top responses/These are people who quickly finish.

- This is true when we cut by tenure, age, country and the month of joining.
- We also see that people who find FB less useful and less satisfying also deactivate at a much higher rate. See here: <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kMFm>
 - One exception is "Do you find FB useful to connect to celebrities?" and this confirms the intuition that FB is not a service used for connecting with celebs.

Content Production:

How are we doing on content production?"

We have just started the analysis and we are already learning some new things. This is tentative (please do not share widely) and needs to be confirmed.

- (Android, Iphone, Msite) x (Text post, photos, reshares) constitute 85% of all content. We will only focus on this segment. If we understand what is happening here, we will understand the important parts of the ecosystem.
- CP/DAU: YOY we are down ~ -20%
- Photos:
 - Producers/DAU: YOY we are flat. Since users have a camera at all times shouldn't we be higher? We have answered this at the beginning of the half. I will include a summary as a part of the complete story next week.
 - CP/DAU: YOY we are down ~ 14% . This is where it gets interesting.
 - Uploads in batches > 5: Contributes to 7% of the 14% drop.
 - Single Photo Uploads: Contributes to 8% of the 14% drop. We are receiving 20% YOY fewer single uploads across all platforms.
 - Just the shift from bulk uploading on web to sharing smaller batches on mobile does not explain the drop in Photos/DAU. We are also receiving fewer single upload YOY.

	% YOY Impact	% Change YOY
Single Uploads	-8.1%	-20%
1-5 Uploads	1.1%	7%
5-20 Uploads	-6.3%	-27%
20+ Uploads	-0.7%	-4%

(Short ppf. Does not include Privacy/Trust. Everything else condensed. Will return to elaborate starting next week.)

Organizational:
Based on feedback from both the analytics team and the XFN team we have decided to get much more organized. With Kyle joining, we feel we have critical mass to allocate an analyst to an area. The plan going forward for the rest of the half and next half is

- Tagging: Benedict (PM: Dan)
- Consumption: Jeremiah (PM: Thai)
- Production: Kyle Shiells (PM: Jason + Kejia)
- Web team + Adhoc: Kyle Shiells/Ram

We had a lot of chopping and changing on this but this is a good and final end state. This is now set in stone and we will not be making any more changes. Thanks to both the analysts and the XFN team for being patient through the process. I have personally learnt a lot through this process.

Photos Production:

- We worked with Rose, Srinivas and Hannah in framing the opportunity on photos. Specifically, we focussed on IG + FB opportunity, and cross checking some of the numbers using Shoebox number.
- Continued work on the Android Upload Reliability script. It's mostly done, but we keep needing to make small changes. <https://phabricator.fb.com/D1046703>
- Jeremiah will be on PTO. Kyle will come in and start executing on the production that Jeremiah decided on with the EM/PM team

Photos Tagging:

- Benedict has gone above and beyond what was expected to really nail the new metric. We are working on a deck to present to the Tagging team. This is done (finally). Big shootout to Benedict for operating on fire mode over the last week to get this done.

Composer :

- Understand roadmap: We have successfully completed the first week of this and presented to the team. We will continue to execute and make progress on this.

Content Production:

- We have completed the weights for content prod. We are moving to the next phase. The focus here is to understand YOY trends and set an appropriate goal.

Subject: Sharing Analytics PPF

Highlights

- Highlight of this week was the first pass of the weights.

Photos Production:

- Photos opportunity: To understand how mobile photo taking habits have improved/changed Jeremiah used Shoebox users who have been active in the month of Jan and in the month of September. The main result was:
 - From Jan1-October 23, the photo taking frequency for these users have increased by 24%
 - From Jan1-October 23, the # photo taken for these users have increased by 11%

Next we intend to compare this with the % of photos shared on FB to see how this has trended.

- Roadmap: Really excited that Jeremiah is putting together an analytics roadmap for the rest of the half on production. Rough plans:
 - Build as dashboard to track photos PR and contributions to PR. Understand how each interface is contributing / hurting the goal (some interfaces are down). Build a dashboard to help us hit goal.
 - Finish diff on upload reliability.
 - Get a basic waterfall in place for each interface (# of users opening photo composer, # of final uploaders, understand the falloff by interface).
 - Longer than next week (still specing this out): See if we can understand the relationship between feedback and upload rate, or understand how many photos users take between uploads (using camera roll logging).

Photos Tagging:

- With-Tag conversion analysis:
 - The question we wanted to answer was why we are only getting a ~4% lift in xy-tags compared to ~30% expected lift?
 - The 30% expected lift was calculated based on the number of faces in photos that were not xy-tagged but with tagged.
 - While 50% of photo tagging sessions using the product have at least one face in it, but we were making suggestions for only ~21% of the sessions. We are making limited suggestions because of the time considerations for facial recognition and recognition confidence. We are not fully realizing the potential of the lift in xy-tags because we are not suggesting enough users to tag.
- Fraction of faces tagged
 - We are working really hard on the final few steps before we wrap up the project.
 - We will close this out shortly

Composer:

Santosh is ramping up on the composer.

- On the operational side, Santosh has been helping the team put metrics into pocket Deltoid, build some basic dashboards and argus reports
- We have kicked off a "Composer Understand Rodmap". There are 4 steps:
 - Step 1: Build a complete high level waterfall (per interface).
 - Step 2: Define "conversion rate". Instead of just looking at #opens/#success, we want to weed out accidental clicks, users who cancel out but post within the next few minutes etc.
 - Step 3: What is correlated with low conversion rate?
 - Context: Device, OS, Interface, Wifi/Carried,
 - Actions: Opens checkins, attaches photos etc
 - Step 4: What user demographics is correlated with low conversion rate? Who are the users who are repeatedly failing?

We have our first checkin today with the team.

Defining Weighted User Content

All content are not equal. For example, the photo in a single photo upload is clearly more valuable the 101st photo in an album. We want the team to focus on driving "quality" content. We have define "valuable" content as content that receives feedback and identified key characteristics of content (e.g., has tags. has text, audience is friends) that is associated with high value content. We built a detailed modeled for Prob(Content receives feedback) as a function of a 25 features of the content. The model has a accuracy of 68% in predicting whether a piece of content will receive feedback (random guessing is 50%). Accuracy at an aggregate level. We then simplified the model based on the impact of different features to the top line metric to arrive at the Weighted User Content metric. Detailed deck here.

Highlights

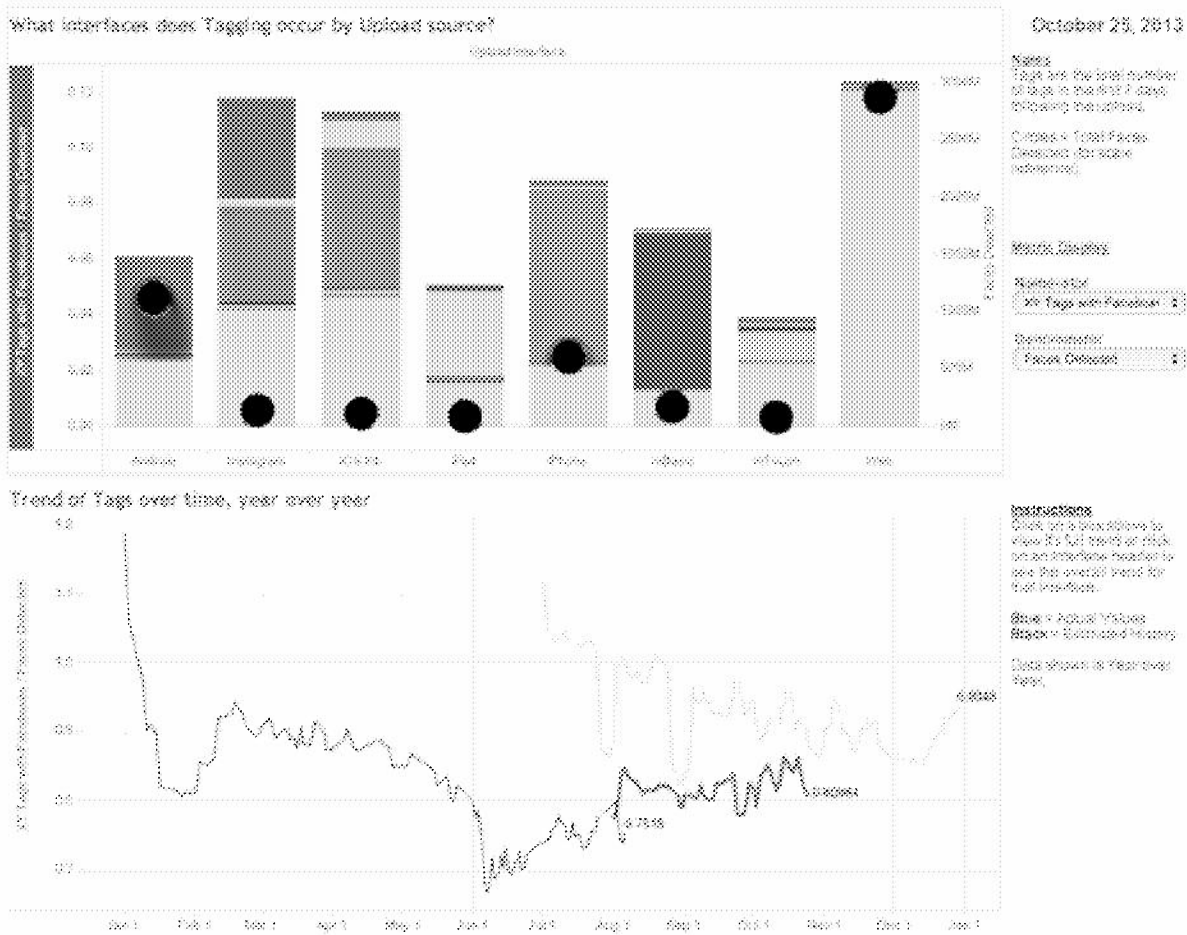

- Solid week where we made progress on a few fronts
- Great progress on the new tagging metric.
- Great progress on the "quality" of content
- Good progress on the "brand identification" for Instagram
- More personnel changes. Hopefully this is the last of it. Santosh, who just finished data camp, joins the team to work on composer. I will continue to work with Scott on the brand identifications problem for Instagram.

Photos

Photos Production: Second slow week on photos production. Most of Jeremiah's time was spent with the drop in ads consumption revenue and fixing the dashboard. We have better things planned for next week including (a) Deep dive on waterfall (b) Identifying overall photos production trends using shoebox data.

Photos Tagging: We have made a lot of progress in developing the new metric and building the data infrastructure (pipelines/dashboards) to track it. Link here. The next step is to really analyze this data and figure out how it relates to the other metric we are tracking. Some observations:

- Only 10% of the faces that are uploaded are tagged.
- It is approximately down 20%-30%. We are working on getting a better understanding of this drop.
- Web is an important place for faces being tagged. Even if the photos are uploaded elsewhere.
- Instagram photos and photos from IOS Integration have very high tag rates even though there is no production tagging for them.
- Even though 80% of the tags on a photo uploaded on an interface happens on the same interface, this drops to 50% of the faces tagged. This tells us that a larger % of "consumption" tagging is on faces compared to production tagging.

Sharing and Composer

Defining Weighted User Content

All content are not equal. For example, the photo in a single photo upload is clearly more valuable the 101st photo in an album. We want the team to focus on driving "quality" content. We have define "valuable" content as content that receives feedback and identified key characteristics of content (e.g., has tags, has text, audience is friends) that is associated with high value content. Towards thus, we modeled the Prob(Content receives feedback) as a function of content type (photo or text post or reshare), audience (friends, public etc.). The model has a accuracy of 68% in predicting whether a piece of content will receive feedback (random guessing is 50%). Even though accuracy at a content level is not very high, the accuracy at an aggregate level is very good. For example:

- The model estimated the probability that an "Text Post with Tags" will receive feedback as 0.90. In the out of sample, it is 0.88.
- The model estimated the probability that link shared through platform will received feedback as 0.13. In the out of sample, it is 0.10

Based on this we can now estimate the relative value of different class of contents.

- Photos = Text Posts = 1
- Reshares: 0.75
- Platform Links: 0.15
- A Photo in a batch of photos: 0.5

We are working on refining these estimates. So please consider these weights as preliminary.

Special Projects

Brand Identification on Instagram: We now have a label ("User", "Not User") for every account on Instagram in hive for US here. Out of the 50 M US users, we have identified 360 K accounts that are brands (if threshold is 0.8). If we use a threshold of 0.5, then we get close to 1 Million brands. Recall, that we have seen very promising results in the out of sample tests. However, we need to get UO to manually vet some of the results to be completely confident in the numbers.

RAPID: Recall that RAPID allows you to run regression on hive tables directly. This weekeend, the progress was to rewrite the AUC and ROC curves that are used to evaluate the performance of classifiers. Next up is Random Forests (likely in the next two weeks).

Highlights

- When I sat down to write the PPF I thought it would be empty. But, looks like we have made some useful contributions this week.
- Last week on Instagram! I will continue to be actively involved and helping the team along as a part-time IC. I will continue to work with Scott on the brand identification problem.
- Kyle joins the Photos team. He is in bootcamp now.

RAPID: Built RAPID this weekend :). RAPID stands for R and Presto Integration for DataAnalysis. You can find it here: <http://dev349.prn1.facebook.com:8100/> This is something I am really proud of .

- If you have a hive table, and you want to run regression, RAPID is a simple UI that lets you do it. This is just a simple UI layer than pipes data from hive into R, runs the regressions and then pipes the results back.
- This should remove friction and help analysts go above and beyond just using "X versus Y" correlations to understand how a set of variable X1,...Xn affects Y. I feel like this has the potential to become something like fast drill.
- I intend to use this very soon to understand how different features of the content (has_text, is_photos, is_tagged) predicts the quality (measured using WUF) of content.

- Sean has earned the distinction of being the first to stress testing it and bringing it down :)

Instagram

Product Understand: (Sean/Ram) We have been working on the two high-pri fires

- What is happening with photo uploads/dau? In addition to what we already knew,
 - The only additional thing that we have uncovered is that and there is a good chance the drop started much earlier than June and just accelerated after June
 - We are redoing a lot of the earlier analysis to ensure there were no mistakes
- What is happening to Instagram growth?
 - Since August 22nd, month over month Instagram MAU growth has dropped from 6% to 3%. However, we have some very good explanations on what is happening.
 - Please see the deck here. <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kHL3>
 - This is preliminary and it would be better to not distribute the results more widely

Earnings Call: (Scott/Ram) This is complete. Unfortunately, we can't discuss the results till the earnings call.

Identifying Brands:(Scott) We are working on productionizing the brand identification model. We should have predictions on which account is a brand in hive by the end of this week! This is a pretty big deal.

Photos

Photos Production (Jeremiah): Slow week. The main output was a better understanding of IG + FB ecosystem. The goal is to form an opinion on the current and future of the photos ecosystem. Jeremiah, Bryan and me put together this awesome dashboard that gives a clear understanding of the ecosystem. Link here:

<https://our.intern.facebook.com/intern/data/portal/photos/trends?=igfb>

- Overall
 - Uploads on IG = 33% x Uploads on FB
 - Participation Rate on IG = 3 x Participation on FB. This makes sense since Instagram is primarily a photo app and FB is more.
- Looking at some leading indicators, it is not unlikely that Instagram and Facebook will eventually have the same number of uploads.
 - On Iphone, Instagram ~ 70% x Uploads on FB
 - In the US, Uploads on Instagram ~ 70-75% x Uploads on FB
 - In the Middle East, Uploads on Instagram = Uploads on FB
- With such massive growth predicted for Instagram, it is important to get users on Instagram share back to FB. Currently it is very low and present a huge opportunity.
 - 70% of Instagram users are FB connected
 - Only 6% of FB connected IG users share back to Facebook and they share 20% of their photo uploads.
 - The fact that 6% of the users share 20% indicates that there are some FB connected users who share back everything and some who share back nothing!

Photos Consumption: What gets measured gets managed. We have finally started measuring likes on photos. I am really excited to have Kyle look into this when he is done with bootcamp. The new dash is here.

<https://our.intern.facebook.com/intern/data/portal/photos/trends?tab=Engagement> A simple insight from this

- Close to 90% of the likes on photos are on photos that are less than 2 days old
- Android and Web have much higher likes/dau than iPhone. Mbasic/Mtouch are the worst

Photos Tagging: As usual Benedict has been working really hard but it has been a frustrating week for him due to various bugs. We are lagging behind on both

- Back-populating the new metric
- Identifying the value of tags

Sharing

We did a quick content production 101 to get going.

Summary

Content Rate

- Web = 2 X Mobile
- Content Type
 - Mobile: Photos = 33%, Reshares = 25%
 - Web: Photos = 33%, Posts = 25%
 - Platform: Photos = 40%, Links = 33%, Posts = 17%

Participation Rate

- Different from Content Rate
- Web = 1.25 x Mobile
- Content Type
 - Mobile: Photos = Shares ~ 33%, Posts ~ 60% of all producers
 - Web: Posts ~ 50%, Photos ~ 40%, Shares ~ 30% of all producers

Highlights

Slow week. Sean and I have been on PTO's.

- Hyan Park is joining the Instagram team.
- I expect next week to be a better week. We have started on a couple of things on Monday (a) Understanding content prod (b) Revisiting the photos/dau (c) FB+IG universe.

Instagram

Earnings Call: (Scott/Ram) The model seems to indicate that there is a drop in US Teen FB DAU. We have been working on tracing the DAU for the combined services (FB+IG) US Teen DAU. Are we catching the teens that we are dropping from FB on IG? If we look at US teens only over the last 2 months, we can see that the total usage on Instagram is increasing. We are working on doing this over the longer term for (FB+IG). See here <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kGHh>

Identifying Brands:(Scott) We had to suspend this because of the earning call work. We briefly did some work in vetting the model and that showed some promising results.

Product Understand Roadmap: (Sean) We are focussed on answering 3 follow up questions.

- Is connecting to the address book as good as connecting to Facebook? [From last week]
 - Following users in your address book is almost as good as following users on Facebook.
- What types of day 1 follows are best?
 - If you follow users with lower follower count (likely, people you know) There's some benefit towards improving first day retention See here. <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kGHh>

- This seems trivial, but there is a significant trend that shows that following users who are active has a benefit to first day retention. See here.<https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kGHI>

FB Photos

Photos Production (Jeremiah):

- IOS Photos Drop:
 - Since August iOS photo participation rate is -13% vs –4% for all interfaces combined. We dug into this and found that 1/3 of the drop was due to iOS 7 / FB 6.5 and 2/3 of the drop was expected seasonality. As a result we are no longer alarmed.
- Shoebox MAU:
 - Fixed the Shoebox dashboard to include MAU. Right not we aren't doing a lot with shoebox but we recognize it as a big opportunity and may look into it more once our photos vs instagram business analysis is done. <https://our.intern.facebook.com/intern/data/shoebox>

Photos Tagging (Benedict):

- Analysis of Android post-post tagging
 - The feature works very very well when there is only 1 face inside, and increased xy self tags by ~14% . The improvement reduces with increased number of faces.
 - Deletions: We observed very high Android xy-tag deletion rates in Deltoid (~+45%), and dug deeper to analyze the cause of these delete. Increased deletions come mainly from taggers deleting tags of themselves or others – the increased deletions on average occur within 10
- Value of a XY-Tag: The goal here is to identify the "value" of a xy-tag in terms of
 1. Value to the uploader (likes/comments on tagged photo):
 - Using the Post-Post tagging experiment, we found that though # of xy-tags/photo was consistently higher for photos with 7 or less tags, engagement metrics (likes/photos and comments/photo) was not consistently higher in the control group compared to the test group. This indicates that higher tagging results does not result in more feedback. Since this is counter intuitive we want to verify this more.
 2. Value to the person tagged
 3. Value to the tagger

Highlights

Overall not a bad week.

- Scott's promising initial results on identifying brands on Instagram
- Photos consumption team is now "unblocked"

Instagram

Identifying Brands: (Scott) The goal of this project is to classify users into businesses versus users. Scott used IG accounts connected to FB pages as a training set and built a Random Forest classifier. The results are promising. So far, our classifier has displayed respectable results, shown in the chart below. The red curve depicts the tradeoff between the rate of true positive brand identification ("hits") and the rate of spurious brand identification ("false alarms"). For example, if you're willing to tolerate a false alarm rate of 20%, this classifier can correctly identify about 85% of brands. The next step involves "vetting" the performance more by manually looking at some accounts. This is pretty promising.

Instagram brand identification

Product Understand Roadmap: (Sean) On the basis of analysis that Sean did the Instagram team has decided to kick off a P0 project called "Project Day One". This will focus on reducing first day churn by redesigning the NUX. We are focussed on answering 3 follow up questions. We have an answer for the 1st one.

+ Is connecting to the address book as good as connecting to Facebook?

+ Following users in your address book is almost as good as following users on Facebook.

- The churn rate for users who FB Follow is 9% regardless of address book follows
- The churn rate for users who Address book follow is 11% regardless of Facebook follows
- Users who follow contacts in both the address book and Facebook practically have the same churn rate as those who ONLY following Facebook or ONLY address book.

Account Insights: (Ram) While we did no actual work we figured out how to build the account insights real-time. The plan is to use PUMA that is built on top of ptail + scribeh.

Photos Production (Jeremiah):

- iOS Photos Drop:
 - Since August iOS photo participation rate is -13% vs -4% for all interfaces. This is a fairly big drop with iOS PR falling from 11.4% to 9.9%. So far we've figured out that the change is driven by fewer uploads (not fewer DAU) and that 1/3 of the drop is due to iOS 7. The rest of the drop appears to be fairly uniform across iOS app versions and across regions. No silver bullet yet but I'm continuing to dig in.
- Photos uploaded by interface:
 - Our goal is to increase mobile participation rate and I'm looking for the biggest opportunities. This week I published a quick analysis showing that our best efforts could be focused on mBasic instead of mTouch because mBasic has dramatically higher DAU (<https://www.facebook.com/photo.php?fbid=10101995086786943&set=gm.569961063052513&type=1>). Our gameplan going forward is to try to rule out any easy wins, specifically devices or browsers that have suspiciously low participation rates.

Photos Consumption (Ram): Photos team is now officially unblocked on the consumption tests!

- Jeremiah added new deltoid photos_feedback category. Our coverage of photos feedback now includes feedback on multi-photo status updates.

Photos Tagging (Benedict):

- Value of a XY-Tag: The goal here is to identify the "value" of a xy-tag in terms of
 1. Value to the person tagged
 2. Value to the uploader (likes/comments on tagged photo)
 3. Value to the tagger (if different from uploader)

We have started with (1). We have some initial results that we are vetting.

Highlights

Overall good week

- On Photos where we finished two long-running projects, Tracking all 'photo' related consumption metrics and evaluating the "fraction of faces tagged".
- On Instagram, Sean's NUX analysis was very well received and some actionable product recommendations/ideas have come out. These will likely get prioritized.
- Dev will be transitioning into a different analytics team.
- We have upgraded to Scott, the intern! The pervious version (Benedict) was buggy :) Welcome Scott! Scott will be working on Instagram in predicting age/gender, identifying brands on the graph.

Instagram

Product Understand Roadmap: (Sean)

- This week we presented the results to the immediate team. It was very well received. Next. We will present it to the broader Instagram team.
- We have started working on the next steps:
 - How many users drop out before they complete registration?
 - Does it matter who you follow on the first day?
 - Is connecting to Address book as good as connecting to FB?

Monetization: (Dev)

- We started tracking why users deactivate their accounts. <https://our.intern.facebook.com/intern/argus/view/184374>
 - 'Privacy Concerns' is a close third. Once we start showing ads, we would want to see how this changes.
 - 'Too Busy' and 'Second Account' are the most given reasons for deleting an Instagram accounts
- User Sentiment survey
 - We have done the prep-work for this. Its being launched today.
 - <https://our.intern.facebook.com/intern/argus/view/184382>

Ad hoc Analyses: (Sean/Ram)

- We had a much better Stats Flash/Weekly report where we managed to explain the metric movements. We used Fast Drill!
- IOS 7 Impact: Confirmed that the impact of IOS7 on Uploads/DAU ~ 4% by redoing the cohort analysis for a longer period.

FB Photos

Photos Production: (Jeremiah) J is back!

- Photos metrics in "Core": Added mobile photo uploads and xy-tagging to the deltoid "core" suite. The goal for the team is to have mobile PR at +10% YoY and mobile tagging at +20% YoY, so we don't want any experiments to drop this.
- Working on identifying opportunities on Mtouch
- Impact of IOS 7.0.2 and 6.5.1 We have set up the cohorts and we should have the impact tomorrow

Photos Consumption (Ram):

- We are officially now tracking feedback on all photo related content (albums, photos and multi-photo stories). We finally have the relevant data backfilled, the jobs running and the dashboard up. This was an extremely painful process. It started with Sean taking it to 33%, Dev taking it to 80% and then me wrapping it up.
- Added unlikes and comment deletes to the deltoid photos suite. This is for the double-tap to like test where we think users might accidentally like photos and later unlike them.

Photos Tagging (Benedict):

- Fraction of faces tagged: The first part of this is done! We know now that –50% YOY in terms of fraction of faces tagged. Further, we found out that this matched very closely with the "Tags/Upload". We have decided to "mid-pri" the next steps in view of this:
 - Understanding the YOY by interface
 - Productioniz-ing this and adding the metric to the dash

A character-building week where almost everything that we attempted to do was hampered by data quality and/or lack of logging. Special shout out to Sean for iterating again and again on the NUX analysis till we have fixed the data quality and we finally have insights that we believe in. Jeremiah is on PTO. Excited to have Jonathan Medwig from BI on load to revamp our photos data infrastructure.

Instagram

Product Understand Roadmap: (Sean)

We finally have a fairly deep, and more importantly, correct understanding. Here are the highlights!

- First day churn (weekly) is a problem
 - 30% of all new users churn on the 1st day. Another 20% new users churn on Day 2-7. When a new user churns, he/she is lost for ever. Only ~2% return again.
- Following, FB Connecting and Uploading are correlated with churn.
 - Every action (Following, FB Connecting and Uploading) your perform reduces first day churn by 1/2. If you do none, churn is 50%. If you do one action it is ~20%. If you do two actions it is 10%. if you do all three it is 5%.
 - Being followed, country, interface, feedback received, feedback given, being private don't matter. This is either because very few people do it or it is not correlated with churn

- Following and New User Churn.
 - Following in NUX is valuable but under-utilized by our users.
 - How many you follow matters up to 10-15 follows. Who you follow does not matter [tentative]
- Next steps
 - Understanding the next lever: FB Connected.

Adhoc Analyses: (Cynthia/Ram)

- IOS7 Impact: The estimated impact of IOS7 on Instagram Upload Rate is 5%. Likely because of permission issues.

Monetization: (Dev)

- We wanted to track # User Deactivations by reason and # FB Disconnects.
 - # User deactivations: 25 K users deactivate every day. We are getting the logging done to understand why they deactivate
 - # FB Disconnects: Close to ~140 K users seem to disconnect and not connect back on the same day. We have confirmed all these are not user-initiated and some percentage of them is because of FB invalidating the auth token. This seems like an opportunity for FB Photos to drive Participartion Rate.

FB Photos

Photos Production: (Jeremiah) On PTO this week. I am covering with help from Cynthia.

- IOS7 and FB4IOS Impact:
 - The first estimates for impact of IOS7 and FB4IOS. ~ 3.5% drop in Photo Paticipation Rate and 7% in Tags/DAU. The likely reasons are IOS7 Permissions, Harrisson and a bug on profile photos.
- Photos Data Infrastrucure Revamp: (Medwig/Max)
 - Context: Since the entire infrastructure was put together in a hurry by me, it is not well designed, hard to understand and often breaks. We have now called in the experts (BI) to build some clean infrastructure. .
 - Progress: This journey 10% complete!

Photos Consumption: (Ram)

No progress :(

Photos Tagging: (Benedict)

- Fraction of faces tagged:
 - Progress: A nasty bug has delayed us finishing this. We hope to wrap this up this week.
 - Context: Since we did not have face boxes on mobile (till recently) we need to estimate how many of the N XY tags on a photo with K faces are actually of people in the photo. We need this to understand where we stand YoY.

Instagram:

[Ram] Drop in Uploads/DAU: We continued to investigate this and we have added a few more pieces to the puzzle (in blue). Here is the complete deck

- Uploads/dau has dropped ~ 15% since June 15. The drop is primarily driven by a drop in Participation Rate. The drop is primarily driven by users who used to upload 2-5 times a week now uploading 1-3 times. Only about 30% of the drop can be accounted for by users who completely stop uploading.
- The drop is across the board. We see it for new/old IG users, private/public, fb connected/not connected, age brackets, regions and interface
- There are two specific dates of interest
 - Drop starts July 20: Though the timing coincides with the launch of the videos product we have found no evidence for this hypothesis.
 - We have verified that users are not uploading videos instead of photos
 - We have verified that users on the old app version also see the drop (3.X)
 - We have verified that the UI change on the "Photo" tab did not cause the drop by tracking the conversion rate for users who start the upload flow.
 - Drop accelerates on August 15:
 - We strongly suspect this acceleration is seasonal. This is based on what we see for FB Photos where we have 2011-2013 trends. Evidence in the deck.
- While we can't rule this out completely, we did some checks to see if the drop in Uploads/DAU is because of an increase in DAU (like background pinging etc.)

[Sean/Cynthia] Bug in the way we accounted for deactivated/activated users: While we thought we had despammed properly, Sean and Cynthia found a bug in the code where count some deactivated users as active. Net impact of this is:

- We were over-counting WAU by ~1 M (< 1%)
- We were over-counting weekly new user registration by ~ 1 M (~ 20%)
- This explains the WoW swings O(20%) in Android and Russia signups

[Sean] NUX studies A consequence of the above bug is that Sean's will need to redo his NUX studies (spread over 3 weeks) to ensure that the insights are still valid. We are already seeing some different results. We will have the complete story by next week.

- 50% (was 33% earlier) of the users do not follow, post a photo or give feedback
- Receiving feedback is correlated to retention. Earlier. We had showed that it was not.

Photos:

[Dev/Bryan] Photos Feedback metrics: For the first time ever we have started tracking photos feedback. We have just 7 days of data. Dev worked on this as his ramp up project and this is just the first step. Dev will now transition into Instagram and I will take over this.

- Dash: <https://our.intern.facebook.com/intern/data/portal/photos/trends?tab=Engagement>
- Some preliminary insights here. <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/kBLM>

[Benedict] Fraction of faces tagged: Since we did not have face boxes on mobile (till recently) we need to estimate how many of the N XY tags on a photo with K faces are actually of people in the photo. We need this to understand where we stand YoY. We are making good progress on this and we expect to wrap this up by middle of next week. The key steps here are:

1. ~~Run facer for 1 M photos everyday in August 2013.~~
2. ~~Collect the number of tags from face boxes and num tags for these photos.~~
3. ~~Build a model $Num\ XY\ Tags\ On\ Faces = f(Num\ XY\ Tags, Num\ Faces)$~~
4. Run facer for 1 M photos everyday for the last 1 year.
5. Use the fitted function to estimate the "Number of XY Tags on Faces" over the last 1 year and get the YoY change in "Fraction of faces tagged"

[Jeremiah] Ramping up on photos. He will start by understanding the photo upload behavior of our Mbasic and Mtouch user base.

CONTENT PRODUCTION

NARRATIVE AND NEXT STEPS

People are sharing less than they did in 2012 – but more importantly they are sharing drastically different types of content

A NOTE ABOUT 2013

- In late 2012 we did some extreme stuff to push re-shares – significantly changing the composition of content and feed
- We undid a bunch (but not all) of our work in the first half of 2013 but YoY re-shares numbers are still very funky
- To avoid being misled by this funk, we're going to use 2012 as our reference point

SPEAKER NOTES FOR SLIDE 3

WALL POSTS

WUC: -10%
Volume: -9%

Status

- Non-birthday in terminal decline: -63% since 2012
- Birthday falling: -10% since 2012

Reasons

- Fewer profile visits and wall posts per visit due to mobile migration and Timeline
- Mobile birthday wall post prompts less effective or missing
- New users use wall posts less than old users (no longer a core part of first experience)

Next steps

- Profile team working on performance wins to drive Profile visits
- People tab will drive visits to Profile and increase to Wall posts
- Improve birthday feed units in feed and add context rows on Profile
- (?) Increase prominence of Composer on Profile (Profile team very against)

UNDIRECTED TEXT POSTS

WUC: -7%
Volume: -5%

Status

- Tanking: -26% since 2012

Reason(s)

- No product team focused on increasing (or defending) text posts
- Cannibalized by re-shares – both are influenced by what you see in feed
- Hurt by migration to phones with cameras / ecosystem may be shrinking
- Zero rating turned off by Telkomsel led to 25% drop in mFeature text posts (~1% topline)

Next step(s)

- Use feed to get some more text posts (sell re-shares if we have to)
- Muse in-feed prompt (or inline posting) based on neighboring content (text posts highly influenced by what you read in feed)
- Anything we can do to push Internet.org along?

UNDIRECTED BULK PHOTOS

WUC: -3%
Volume: -9%

Status

- Falling fast: -29% since 2012

Reason(s)

- Mobile migration means fewer photo albums
- Team focused on basic mobile use cases rather than bulk tools

Next step(s)

- Make it easier and more reliable to select multiple photos (e.g. Simplepicker)
- Storytelling for albums and multi-photo posts (e.g. Snowflake and Underwood)
- Mobile “select all” photos based on time range and location

UNDIRECTED SINGLE PHOTOS

WUC: +3%
Volume: +1%

Status

- Doing well: +11% since 2012

Reason

- Mobile migration leading to shifts in photo sharing behavior
- Ecosystem naturally growing (e.g. new use cases like selfies)
- Tons of product work

Next steps

- Stay on current path (e.g. Simplepicker)

UNDIRECTED RE-SHARES

WUC: +2%
Volume: +12%

Status

- Doing well: +66% since 2012

Reasons

- Feed tweaks to promote for re-shares in 2013 (only partially rolled back)
- Introduced Share on mobile
- Possible that by optimizing feed for likes and comments we're also optimizing it for re-shares

Next steps

- Build good version of Share Now (similar to Paper's implementation)
- Sell some re-shares to buy text posts

GROUP

WUC: +1%
Volume: +1%

Status

- Doing well: +25% since 2012

Reasons

- Increase driven by introduction of single and multi-photo functionality

Next steps

- Stay on current path (e.g. separate app, native Android, increase good groups)
- Make it easier to post to Groups via universal Composer

SPEAKER NOTES FOR SLIDE 16

1. Big increase in re-shares (+0.18) cannibalizes text posts (-0.08)
2. Drop in batch photos (-0.13) not offset by marginally more single photos (+0.01)
3. Wall posts in terminal decline

WUC HAS SOME SHIFTS BUT NOT NEARLY AS DRAMATIC

- Wall posts decrease (21% to 13%) as do undirected text posts (31% to 29%)
- Single photos increase (14% to 20%) as do re-shares (6% to 10%) and group posts (10% to 14%)

SPEAKER NOTES FOR SLIDE 17

1. Big increase in re-shares (+0.18) cannibalizes text posts (-0.08)
2. Drop in batch photos (-0.13) not offset by marginally more single photos (+0.01)
3. Wall posts in terminal decline

VOLUME SUMMARY – WE'RE FALLING BECAUSE...

- 1. Wall posts are falling due to mobile migration because of falling Profile visits, less prominent wall composer and no (or poor) in feed birthday unit
- 2. Bulk photos are falling due to mobile migration (and we don't get enough single photos to compensate)
- 3. Text posts are falling because they haven't been supported (or defended) by any team and have been cannibalized by re-shares and photos

THE MORE LIKELY YOU ARE TO LIKE OR COMMENT, THE MORE LIKELY YOU ARE TO SHARE

NEW USERS ARE MORE LIKELY TO RE-SHARE THAN OLDER USERS

WHY ARE TEXT POSTS FALLING?

TEXT POSTS ARE CANNIBALIZED BY RE-SHARES

- 1. Re-shares directly cannibalize text posts – if a user re-shares something in a FB session, she is less likely to post a text post
- 2. Text posts are ‘triggered’ by what a user sees in feed:
 - 2/3rds of iOS ‘Status’ entries happen 1 minute after the app is opened
 - 2/3rds of iOS ‘Photo’ entries happen within 1 minute of app opening
- 3. Unlike photos, text posts are malleable and can be “triggered” by what users see in feed – fewer status updates in feed means fewer status updates created

RE-SHARES HAVE BEEN INCREASING

We're planning on launching a handful of changes over the next few days.

All of these have been tested independently, but we're just starting a joint test today. Assuming that everything seems consistent with pre-test results, we'll roll this out tomorrow. Here are all the individual tests.

EXAMPLE 7

Mithong Wang • Feed FYI

Aug 2013

Ranking model change for www launched on Saturday 07/20/2013.

There are mainly two changes:

1) enable out of time range stories to bump:

Previously when a story is not selected in a snapshot, it's not eligible to show up in next snapshot(except some special cases). Now we enable out of time range stories to show up, but with more strict requirement(we reduce their weight by 0.1 and the final weight should be higher than threshold + 0.1). As a result, those high quality stories that did not get in at the first place would have another chance(possibly like page stories get lots of feedback after a while. Some of them are probably better than post from you low coefficient friends.

2) less boost for status. We did boosting for status. But with lots of other changes(bumping etc), we are now boosting too much for status(bake-off experiment also shows this). We reduce boosting for status.

With those two changes, we got the following improvement(backtest result, www only)

like +3.1%

comment +4.2%

outbound_click +10.2%

share +8.5%

<http://fburl.com/14686190>

you can break it down by subject type <http://fburl.com/14686195>. It's some positive for friends feed and particularly good for pages. But metric for groups dropped as expected(out of time range was enabled before).

John Malar Deltoid results: <http://fburl.com/14686580>

Total events on web:

Likes +2%

Comments +0.8%

Reshares +5.8%

Status updates -4.8%

[Since we are excluding re-shares without text from the content production definition now, this is slightly net negative on content production]

Likes + Comments in Groups: -3%

Mobile feed ad impressions seem to be up (???) [<http://fburl.com/14686615>]

Weighted user feedback, which is the infod goal, actually appears to be 1.1% "down" in the backtest (<http://fburl.com/14686632>). From scuba it does look like the vast majority of the likes+comments gain is on page content, with feedback to friends roughly flat: <http://fburl.com/14686662>. Will try to dig in to why the feedback goal is down if likes+comments to friends is flat...could be due to the dip in groups feedback (which are often non-friend users).

Is the backtest still running?

EXAMPLE 8

 Lars Backstrom
October 2012

I'm about to turn status updates up a little bit more in feed (doing this right now). This was pretty successful before, and so we're going to go a bit further. From qrt 1111, test results are:

WWW

likes -0.53 feed / -0.16 sitewide comments -0.16 feed / +0.46 sitewide ads in feed -1.6% slates / -0.5% revenue
status updates +2.05%
shares in feed -2%

MOBILE

likes -0.32%
comments +0.6%
ads in feed -1% slates / +2% revenue
status updates +1.7%

Overall revenue is within margin of error

Like · Comment · Share

IT IS NOT JUST BOOSTING RE-SHARES THAT HAS AN EFFECT ON STATUS UPDATES – OTHER FEED CHANGES IMPACT TEXT POSTS AS WELL

EXAMPLE 1

We're going to launch two relatively small feed ranking changes tomorrow. First, we're adding a few more features that capture country-level differences. Second, we're going to turn down the diversity penalties we've been applying that prevent too many stories from the same actor.

Metrics impacts from the first (qrt_feed 1140)

-1% ads in feed revenue (no change overall)

+0.5% feed likes

+0.2% feed comments

+1% shares

+3% hide

+5% home appids

and the second (qrt_feed 1204)

-1.5% home appids

+1% feed likes

+0.5% feed comments

+0.8% feed shares

+3% feed fanning

+1% status updates created

EXAMPLE 2

We are launching the following 2 changes today. Public facing blog post:
<https://newsroom.fb.com/news/2017/news-feed-fyi-what-happens-when-you-see-more-updates-from-friends>

1. Unboosting page status updates: About an year back we shipped a boost for all status updates since it led to an increase in content production. However recent experiments indicate that the content production was primarily driven by seeing more friend status and not page status. Removing this boost for page status updates helps in a more consistent reach for page post across the different story types and also removes the incentive for pages to post links as status.

2. Outbound click value: We are further continuing to optimize the value of outbound clicks - dropping it for low quality pages (eg memes) and increasing a bit on mobile & reducing on www to be more consistent.

Results:

LOCAS: + 2%

An FYI that's better late than never: Readstate bumping has been enabled on m_touch since Monday. Metrics of top news feed on m_touch in qrt test 1521_4291:

Click: -2.8%
Comment: 5.6%
Like: 6.2%
Outbound click: 33.3%
Share: -7.7%
Status update: 2.83%
Ads clicks: 8.8%

Most of the gains on comments and likes came from friends' stories. The drop on shares was a result of reducedimps on page stories. (Note that shares are rare on m_touch in general, roughly 1:10 to comments and 1:100 to likes.)

Overall metrics are slightly positive given the small fraction of m_touch traffic. Around +0.3% to our top line weighted feedback goal: <http://fburl.com/14693827> "source_weighted_user_feedback".

-0.5% drop in text posts

ECOSYSTEM ALSO MAY BE SHRINKING

- We now have Instagram / Snapchat / Pinterest that are communication tools purely based on photos
- More people have phone and phones have cameras
- It will be hard to isolate the impact of this

WHY ARE WALL POSTS DOWN?

TIMELINE VISITS HAVE BEEN DROPPING

- These are all provide viewer profile pairs, including self profile views.

WE WILL FIRST FOCUS ON BIRTHDAY WALL POSTS...

TIMELINE HURT BIRTHDAY POSTS

Effect of timeline rollout

MOBILE MIGRATION HURTS BIRTHDAY POSTS

Wall Posts	Overall	Web	Android	iPhone	mFeature	mSmart
WUC/DAP	0.04	0.05	0.015	0.025	0.035	0.005
YOY	-6%	+ 5%	49%	13%	15%	-62%

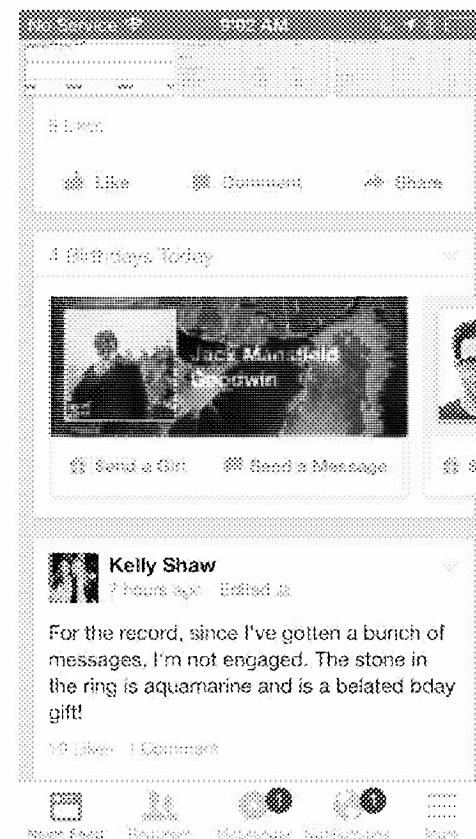

Drivers of the drop

1. The drop in birthday posts in purely Mobile CP/DAP= $\frac{1}{2}$ x Web CP/DAP
2. M-Smart on Nov 26: We removed the reminder box on Mtouch.

MOBILE BIRTHDAY FEED PROMPTS NOT EFFECTIVE

- “Dummy stories” so they aren’t ranked well
- Say “Send as Message” instead of “Write Post”
- Don’t exist on mFeature
- Logging messed up (e.g. can’t attribute wall posts to these widgets)

NEXT WE DISCUSS NON-BIRTHDAY POSTS...

WALL POSTS

Drop only seen for Web and Iphone

TIMELINE HURTS WALL POSTS; NEW USERS USE WALL POSTS LESS

- We can clearly see the effect of timeline rollout. The impact was estimated at $O(10\%)$.
- On both Mobile and Web, with time users seem to be using the product less
- New users use wall posts less

WALL POSTS, AS A PRODUCT, SEEM TO BE DYING

Wall Posts	Overall	Web	Mobile	Android	Iphone	MBasic	Mtouch
CP/DAU	0.04	0.03	0.03	0.03	0.02	0.06	0.02
YOY	-40%	-40%	-40%	-3%	-50%	-40%	-40%

There is a steady decline and this is compounded by some step changes:

- Web: Step changes on timeline rollout
- People use the product less over time
- New people use the product less than old people

EFFECT OF MOBILE MIGRATION

WHAT WE DID

- We looked at a cohort of users who registered before June 2012
- We look at two cohorts
 - ‘Test cohort’: Users who first used FB on a mobile in Jan 2013
 - ‘Control cohort’: Users who are only on Web till July 2013
- We look at YOY from June 2012 to June 2013 (7day and 28 day avg)

SUMMARY

Content Type	YOY Change in control	YOY Change in cohort that upgraded	Estimated impact of shift to mobile
WUC/DAU	2%	2%	0%
Overall content/DAU	20%	10%	-10%
DAU	10%	30%	20%

Mobile migration does change what and how people share. However it is not a major negative driver for WUC/DAU. It does drop Volume/DAU and increase DAU.

SUMMARY - II

Content Type	YOY Change in control	YOY Change in cohort that upgraded	Estimated impact of shift to mobile	Estimated impact to topline WUC/DAU
WUC/DAU	2%	2%	0%

Mobile migration does change what and how people share.
However it is not a major negative driver for WUC/DAU.
It does drop Volume/DAU and increase DAU.

WHY ARE BULK PHOTOS DOWN AND SINGLE PHOTOS UP?

SUMMARY

- People do share photos more frequently on mobile compared to web
- Batch photos are declining due to mobile migration
- Single photos, as an ecosystem, is growing both on mobile and web

These insights are also confirmed by the analysis (next section) that we did for a single cohort of users who get a phone.

MOBILE PARTICIPATION RATE IS HIGHER THAN WEB

Depending on the specific region Mobile Posts PR can be 2 X Web Posts PR

AND THIS IS HOW OVERALL PHOTOS PR TRENDS...

We had some big setbacks with Wilde and Mustang towards the end of 2012 but since then we have caught up and we are doing better than 2013 and comparable to 2012

- Before phones, people would take their digital cameras out for special events, vacations etc.
- Then, they would post a bunch of photos at once – after uploading them to their computer
- With phones, people take and share more photos more often
- They share them more frequently and individually (rather than waiting to upload a bunch at once)

MOBILE BATCH PHOTOS UPLOAD RATE IS LOWER THAN WEB

MOBILE VERSUS WEB BATCH SIZE

As we can see batch sizes on mobile are much smaller.

Alberto, I have spoken to Eusden last week on this specific topic. The possibility of using invites requests has unblocked their migration plan. They were reluctant to do so earlier, as losing access to non-app friends that they use for their growth would not have been ideal for them.

Ok, things are not as bad as they seemed, apologies for the trash. There was a series of unfortunate coincidences that made me think of the worst.

1/ We verified that the endpoint has not been "leaked" and calls seems to be coming all from Pinterest servers.
2/ We verified that the volume of calls per day is actually around 6M successful and 40M failed due to invalid access tokens.

I am working with Pinterest to understand how they are using this endpoint, why they are making so many calls, and why they have so many invalid access tokens.

@KP - Is Pinterest aware that they won't have access to this endpoint anymore after they migrate to v2? When do you think they will be done with the migration? Let me know if you/they need any help, I can always stop by their office.

Cheers,
Alberto

I seeing logs of this calls coming form Russians IP. I'll have Site Integrity help me investigate, but this seems like a serious issue. If that's the case, I would err on the side of shutting this down until Pinterest can secure their calls.

Hello Alberto,

Thanks a lot for flagging this.

Considering Pinterest are in the process of migrating to the V2 of the API (the opportunity to test the Invites Dialog certainly helped unblock this), where this endpoint does not seem to be relevant anymore, I'd rather not thrash the partner at this stage. Instead, I would recommend that we work with them to optimize the number of calls they are making until the final migration is complete.

Thoughts?

Subject: Pinterest abuse of /orderedfriends whitelist

Hi Ime, KP,

I am concerned about Pinterest being whitelisted for the /orderedfriends endpoint (the one that returns a set of closest friends). They are calling this endpoint almost 3 BILLION times a day and growing (see attachment). I found this out by investigating another API issue they raised, and I just asked them for more information on what's going on.

My recommendation is to remove them from the whitelist to prevent issues with platform stability and integrity. We can then evaluate further when they can tell us what's going on. We will have to revisit this whitelist in any case because of PS12N changes, so we may well do it now.

Comment History

Simon Cross: Oct 9, 2014 2:51pm

Harshdeep, Benjamin Eddie - guys, /v2.x/me/ordered friends returns non-app friends.

We could a) make it return app-friends only or b) deprecate this in v2.0 up.

Only Pinterest and Netflix are using this right now.

I've vote for removing it entirely as part of the transition to v2 - thoughts?

Alberto Tretti: Oct 9, 2014 2:58pm

My only concern is Netflix using this API in conjunction with the Titan API for their "send a recommendation" feature.

Konstantinos, do you know what's the action plan with Netflix and API v2? I am ok with removing it if they are only going to get app-friends.

Konstantinos Papamiltiadis: Oct 9, 2014 3:03pm

My recommendation to Eddie and team has been that we preserve access to this API for Netflix, including non-app friends as part of their TITAN API integration for consoles.

I am 100% in favor of the idea of removing it for Pinterest for 2.0 but i would not recommend removing it for Netflix going forward.

Eddie O'Neil: Oct 9, 2014 3:08pm

What does Pinterest use this for?

We're vetting questions like this with Mike in ~2 weeks, so let me know.

Konstantinos Papamiltiadis: Oct 9, 2014 3:09pm

Mainly to provide recommendations for app friends - who to follow once you have an account set up.

Simon Cross: Oct 9, 2014 3:13pm

Konstantinos - how does Netflix use ordered friends?

They'll likely need to keep all friends to allow their titan integration to work, but not sure they need to retain access to ordered friends

Konstantinos Papamiltiadis: Oct 9, 2014 3:15pm

You are correct Simon. Most importantly they need access to the full friends list before they can make use of orderedfriends.

As part of Titan they use this channel to message friends (app and non app) to watch movies on devices we don't currently offer invites dialogs or even message dialogs.

Simon Cross: Oct 9, 2014 3:17pm

Sure, I get they need all friends to render typeaheads etc.

But how would their integration be different if they didn't have ordered friends?

Alberto Tretti: Oct 9, 2014 3:17pm

They use the precise version of orderedfriends (bucket of ~10-20 friends I think) because the real estate on devices is small and it would be a pain to browse many friends. They try to show you the ones that matter.

Simon Cross: Oct 9, 2014 3:20pm

Alberto Hypothetically if we removed Ordered Friends how long do they need to react? is this a serverside change for them or is the call to ordered_friends baked into the client?

Alberto Tretti: Oct 9, 2014 3:30pm

If I interpret this data correctly <https://fburl.com/60997669> they only make server side calls, so they should be able to react quickly.

Simon Cross: Oct 15, 2014 8:15am

So i'm game to keep this for Netflix, but think we should remove for Pinterest as they won't continue to get full friends, and it'd be better to avoid the eng work to scope this to app-friends only.

Eddie - can we ask Mike this question as part of the mutual friends discussions Agreed; this feels like an age gating question for Platform more than a privacy issue.

Photo privacy question: A friend is asking about restricting her photos so that friends of tagged friends (that is, FoF) can't see her photos. She finally discovered the checkbox in the Custom dialog for her album's audience selector where, if she unchecks it, friends of tagged friends can no longer see the photo.

However, even after changing this setting in her album, each individual photo in the album still says that friends of tagged friends can see the photo. Is that potentially just stale/wrong explanation text on the individual photo? Or is this whole don't-let-FoF-see-my-photos process really complicated?

Thanks for explaining!

A friend posted a photo, with custom privacy. When I click on the story chevron, it specifically mentions Hithika as a friend who can see the story on my timeline. However, the friend who posted the photo (Gaurav) and Hithika are not friends, and I'm pretty sure she's not included in the set of people who can see the photo. Also, if I navigate to my timeline and try to view it as Hithika, I don't see this post.

Am I misunderstanding something, or is this a bug?

The neko growth is just freaking awesome. Completely exceeding my expectation re what is possible re ramping up paid products.

I would be really curious to see the stacked bar of spend / how it is growing. Is the growth propelled by a few guys who are really putting weight behind it or a bunch of people coming on in the 10s of K per day? Also, what percent are using the SDK and tracking value all the way through?

Really great stuff

Highlights:

- Neko grew another 50% this week! Hit a high of $725K Friday (see chart below). We are now 5% of total Ads revenue and 21% of mobile ads revenues.
- Team excited about Payments Sprint Kickoff next week

Payments:

- General
 - Carrier Billing Fraud – Continues to be an issue since 40%+ of volume not eligible for refunds, planning for options next week
 - Sprint – Kick off next week – focused on top 6 ideas for revenue and credential growth
- Canvas Payments / Payment Engine
 - Payment Engine Goal – Achieve 50% TPV through PE by May, 75% by end of June – before July 10th cutover date
 - Partners - First partner likely to start testing in first or second week of February, a few minor launch blocking bugs being worked over the next two weeks in preparation
 - Timeline – Working on detailed timeline for Payment Engine migration, including communication plans
- Payments 3.0 / New Initiatives
 - Designed the UI for partner site – reviewing this week <https://www.facebook.com/pxlcld/hZg9>
 - Designs for adding new cards and addresses also proposed:

Mobile App Installs Ads (Project Neko)

- Revenue grew 50% and hit $725K this Friday – Neko is now 5% of total ads revenues and 20% of mobile ad revenue!

- Wechat and other competitive networks are no longer advertising on Neko based on policy. (Please contact me if you have any questions)
- Sales – European sales offices are starting to prioritize Neko. We are working with Shyam Rajaram's team to scrape the app store across European markets to help them find high-grossing apps that are not currently Neko spenders. Separately, we are in the process of understanding opportunities across verticals and regions.
- Advertiser Feedback - Lots of positive feedback including one from Brazilian advertiser showing Neko drives significantly more volume than competitor networks. Using Neko, the app was able to stay at the top of the Brazilian app store for over 2 weeks. <https://www.facebook.com/groups/350580744990547/permalink/460861407295813/>
- User Sentiment – Changed Neko rendering on iPad to use smaller image from app center. Collected user sentiment data on m-site which shows no difference between users who see Neko and baseline though the sample size is small. Will get data on Wilde and Mustang in a couple weeks.
- Product Improvements – Fixed oCPM underprediction which caused underdelivery. After the fix, we have seen ratio of oCPM to CPC Neko ads rose from approximately 18% to 27% of total impressions and total Neko delivery increased 12% against the backtest. oCPM and general model improvements for Neko is now a priority for the core ads optimization team so we expect lots of incremental improvements here.
- Design - The new design for Neko units, which is actor-led and more closely resembles other feed units, is now complete across all interfaces (Wilde, Mustang, and M-site). The new unit made the Wilde branch cut-off this past Thursday.

Highlights:

- Neko continuing its growth this week when we hit the $500K daily volume Friday!
- New Payments team process has launched, thanks to Jenny, our new TPM. This will provide more clarity and discipline on our investments as more teams are requesting payments assistance for their monetization projects

Payments:

- General
 - New process launched – see details here: <https://www.facebook.com/groups/fbcredits/permalink/576566245693199/>
 - Our January roadmaps are located here:
 - Reporting Eng - <http://fburl.com/9347771>
 - Risk Eng - <http://fburl.com/9347773>

- Payment Engine - <http://fburl.com/9347774>
- Canvas Payments / Payment Engine
 - Locked Breaking Change Date – July 10th, will announce likely in March/April timeframe
 - Payment Engine Goal – Achieve 50% TPV through PE by May
 - Partners on Payment Engine – Zong and Boku are done, Playspan is fixing some bugs, LiveGamer wrapping up soon, GMG targeting end of Jan, Trialpay preparing to move devs over.
 - Sprints – Finalized list of top prospects for Canvas Revenue and Credential Harvesting sprints kicking off in 10 days. Staffed engineers to support
 - Canvas Payment Experience Update – Working on flow redesign to support the successful Canvas Growth tests completed by George and Vishu. Currently combining the positive tests into one flow to launch.
 - Carrier Billing – Currently rethinking experience in order to support long term growth of Carrier Billing and relationships
- Payments 3.0 / New Initiatives
 - Preparing to test with 3 partners in late Feb
 - Worked on the design for adding/editing credit card and shipping address

Mobile App Installs Ads (Project Neko)

- Revenue continues to grow – hit $500K! Note that $80K is from Wechat who will no longer be advertising with us as of tomorrow (call me if you have questions)
- Policy Change – Current Page Post policy in which text cannot be on more than 20% of the ad image will be extended to Neko on Tuesday. Team is spending the weekend reaching out to devs to bring them into compliance. Will monitor impact on revenues and conversion
- Ads Team Improvements – Due to the recent growth, ads team has committed to working on our key asks – Feed optimization, OS version targeting, and custom oCPM model.
- Neko Facts – deck attached and is an interesting read – Thanks Max!

Highlights:

- Exited 2012 on a $120M 7-day annual runrate for Neko! Going from nothing to $120M runrate in revenue from mobile developers is a huge accomplishment for the whole platform team.
- Payment Engine developer ramp starting this week – planning out final investments and timing

Payments:

- Canvas Payments / Payment Engine
 - Ramp for Payment Engine kicked off – still targeting mid-Feb announcement of breaking change
 - Currently redesigning Mobile Shortcutting for Payment Engine
 - Carrier billing fraud clean up continues (see last week), losses have been stopped and working on refunds and improving controls
 - Started planning on Canvas Revenue and Credential Harvesting sprint, coding starts week of 22nd – led by PJ and Mary

- Payments 3.0 / New Initiatives
 - Working on designs for Payments 3.0
 - Continuing to engage with partners to get a couple lined up for launch
- Monetization for Other Teams
 - Karma holiday ramp – hit 3x spike in volume to about 4500 transactions per day, then back to around 1200 transactions per day, low chargeback rate (0.1%)

Mobile App Installs Ads (Project Neko)

- Revenue currently around high $200K during week and $300K+ over weekends, CPCs are $.13, and CTR is about 2.3%. Recently, Neko CPMs have been higher than Page Posts and Page Like stories for short periods of time, meaning that we are competing well in feed. The v2 changes look like they are starting to moving the needle for our metrics.
- Some great follow up press since v2:
 - Tech Crunch about GREE's success - <http://techcrunch.com/2013/01/04/early-studies-show-facebook-mobile-app-install-ads-perform-well-for-devs-indicating-big-revenue-potential/>
 - Katie Smillie from Miso - <http://katiesmillie.com/2012/12/19/facebook-crushes-the-competition/>
- oCPM underprediction continues to be a problem – we are asking devs to bid $20 to $30 to get delivery at $2 to $3 CPIs. Working with ads team to address.
- Power Editor updates – Working on the design of buying ads for Neko via Power Editor – some great changes are coming soon which will make it easier to buy.
- Fixed targeting issue where we were delivering ads to incorrect devices 10% of the time
- Focused on v3 – adding Install as a goal in Page Posts
- New dashboard with list of spenders is available here: <https://our.intern.facebook.com/intern/data/neko2>, full dashboard still available here: <https://our.intern.facebook.com/intern/data/neko>

Highlights:

- Neko hit a high of $360K per day during the holiday ramp largely thanks to Zynga and Gyft. Great work from the ads team getting Gyft on board. They are so happy they are looking to spend another $50K before the holidays.
- Closing the year on payments with Payment Engine ready to go out to devs in Jan.

Payments:

- Canvas Payments / Payment Engine
 - Ramp for Payment Engine set to start in early Q1
 - Mobile Shortcutting and New Payment Promotion are last two major items for the migration though they can stay on Credits for now without affecting ramp. Mobile shortcutting will be available in Feb and NPP is slated for Q2.
 - Breaking change will probably be announced in mid-Feb. Will be monitoring key partners who will start running volume around the 3rd week of Jan before we finalize the date. Goal is to have everything ramped and cleaned up by end of June.

- Huge mobile fraud ring hit us to the tune of $910K of which $240K is outside of our clawback window, and most of which was spent on Zynga Poker. BillR and team have stopped the fraud and working on post-cleanup. Separately, we may proactively bring down bulk discounting top prices in flow since we are seeing a lot of it bought in the game of origin and spent in Zynga Poker.
- Kicked off sprint on Canvas Revenue (taking torch from George and Vishu) and Credential Growth. Will be focusing on optimizing the payment flows and experience (e.g. mobile) and increasing the base of spenders across the board.
- Payments 3.0 / New Initiatives
 - Decided to scope down so we can launch our test in Feb with Braintree and a couple partners.
 - Designed experience and now currently working with a couple partners including Fab on the launch.
- Monetization for Other Teams
 - New process in place for cross-team prioritization for features that Payments supports (e.g. Karma, Airmail, Boosts). Jenny will roll out in Q1.

Mobile App Installs Ads (Project Neko)

- Hit a peak of $360K yesterday and 1M clicks. Top spenders are Gyft, WeChat, and the A&E/Lifetime/History Apps for iPad
- Last week's v2 launch was successful and got some great press for Neko. Attached is the press summary from David S.
- V3 Plan locked down (see below) – some challenges locking down ads resources on device targeting and optimization given their reprioritization, but otherwise on track with new plan
- Teck is leaving to start his own thing, and he has transitioned his work to Max. Please reach out to Max or me for assistance if you have questions.

- MVP for Payments 3.0 is complete. Prototypes working on both Android and iOS with end-to-end transactions flowing through Braintree.
- Neko reached $200K again this weekend! With the launch of creative customization and larger unit on Tuesday, we should be able to grow this by 30% over the next few weeks as developers adopt the new sized banner.

Payments:

- Canvas Payments / Payment Engine
 - Payment Engine nearly complete – Playspan plans to finalize code today
 - Playdom, Zynga, Kixeye all agreed to implement the new Payment Engine in early/mid-January, documentation drafted

- Breaking change announcement is slated for end of Jan or early Feb after a few partners have gone live – will likely go with 120 days to give sufficient time to migrate
- Payments 3.0 / New Initiatives
 - MVP for Payments 3.0 is complete and we have run test transactions through Braintree!
- Monetization for Other Teams
 - Airmail launch slated for 12/19 – transactions will run through Payment Engine <https://www.facebook.com/groups/airmail/>
 - Boosts – Ready to move over to Payment Engine from FB Credits

Mobile App Installs Ads (Project Neko)

- Achieved $200K again this weekend (spend peaks on weekends)
- Three items in Tuesday's v2 release – 1) Creative customization with new unit size, 2) Inline installs, and 3) Demographic insights
- Bug in latest Android and iOS apps on Thursday where Neko ads were not getting delivered – fixed on Friday

- Payment engine work nearly complete – waiting on Playspan's last push. Announcement of breaking change slated for January
- Neko hit $200K per day over weekend after removing subsidy thanks to a feed ad fix which increased CTRs by 74%!

Payments

- Payments 3.0 / New Initiatives
 - Further fleshed out business model for Payments 3.0
 - Some promising conversations with merchants to get their feedback
 - Completed user research and reviewed results
 - PayPal is open to working without exclusivity
- Canvas Payments / Payment Engine
 - In final stretch of Payment Engine, waiting on Playspan to make final release of the year. Prepping for announcement in early Jan if all goes well.

Mobile App Installs Ads (Project Neko)

- Achieved $200K per day this weekend after removing the subsidy due to an feed ad fix which improved CTRs by 74%!
- Redesigned a unit with the medium sized banner
- Prepping for Neko creative customization launch next week

Highlights:

- Payments 3.0 mobile native app demo for iOS and Android is ready! Really slick experience. First test transaction set for Friday of next week.
- Karma opened up iTunes Gift Cards – 73% of attempted sales were fraudulent, but we lost only a couple hundred dollars due to the efforts of the payments ops team

Payments

- Payments 3.0 / New Initiatives
 - Finalized designs for usability testing, testing has begun with some promising early insights, more testing next week
 - Planning first transaction for next week
 - Kicked off planning for credential harvesting sprint
 - Social Plastic – Employee testing starting next week, user testing in January
- Canvas Payments / Payment Engine
 - Boku/Zong ready to go for Payment Engine, Playspan may or may not make the pre-holiday push, if they miss it, will go out in January
 - Planned announcement of breaking change in early January if Playspan ready, and late January if Playspan goes out in late January, will give devs 90 to 120 days
- Core Payments
 - Investing into preparing for fraud ramp up

Mobile App Installs Ads (Project Neko)

- $150K in revenues per day – with 2x eCTR and 4x on Wilde in effect – looking at how the subsidy is costing us (will follow up with data over the weekend)
- Zuck designed unit did not do as well as our current unit: -25% on CTR to 32% for install rates adjusted for height, kicked off testing a new unit styled after page post ads
- Work on dedicated model has started – will launch by the end of the year
- Fab went out with code snippet and started to report back LTV data
- Inline installs went live last weekend in latest Wilde – pulling data on the effect on click to install rates

- Welcome to Jenny Truong, who is joining as our new TPM.

Payments

- Payments 3.0 / New Initiatives

- Technical design for Payments 3.0 flow is set for MVP. Dev is kicking off and MVP should be ready in early January. First integration will be with Braintree.
- Modeled out direct monetization options for Payments 3.0 business - vetting direct vs indirect monetization options
- Drafted user testing plans to understand key questions on Pay with Facebook – user testing in 2 weeks
- Spending next two weeks working on visual design and experience details for different use cases
- Social Plastic project approved – targeting mid-Dec employee launch and January user launch thanks to Ted, Suzie, and PJ
- Canvas Payments / Payment Engine
 - Alt-Pay ready for provider testing after next week's push – should be ready for developers to in December sometime
 - Chargeback re-presentments – dialed up chargeback re-presentment ops system to fight 100% of Visa and MC friendly fraud chargebacks, will enable $3M in TPV per year
- Core Payments
 - Investing in quality and stability to ease issues from recent SEVs and oncall issues
 - First "Ops-Eng Hackaday" - Risk engineering team worked close with PayOps/Risk teams to work on high impact fixes
- People –
 - Reshma is leaving to start her own company. We will miss her, and we will bid a fond farewell at her going away party in January. She has 3 more weeks before her big trip to Antarctica in December.
 - Welcome to Jenny T who is Platform's first TPM. Most recently, she has been working on moving the new hire experience online and building the candidate flow on Salesforce. She also helped build the recruiting tool that we all use today.

Mobile App Installs Ads (Project Neko)

- After fixing a bunch of issues and restoring the eCTR overestimation, we are back up to $100K spend today.
- Completed most of our v2 Roadmap – update is in slide below. Biggest levers to launch in next 6 weeks:
 - Inline installs – launched with latest Wilde, turning on GK this weekend
 - Ads customization – slated for Dec Wilde release
 - Neko dedicated model – Waiting on ads team, currently planned for mid-December
- Tested Fab creative customization and the new Zuck unit – data should be available tomorrow

Subject: RE: Weekly Platform Monetization HPM

An eventful week!

Highlights:

- Payments 3.0 partner discussions going well. Opening up about our vision and the user experience has helped us a lot.
- Making millions more annual TPV due to PJ's Zong/Boku allocation change.
- Two SEVS hit the Payments team hard
- Neko had major issues (drop of revenue by 50%+) due to 3 changes, and we are unrolling/fixing all of them.

Payments

- Payments 3.0
 - PayPal: Good meeting with PayPal's working team was followed up with their response for complete exclusivity on Payments 3.0. Met again where we walked through their concerns. They seem open to participating, but they are concerned about losing customers.
 - Braintree: Leaning forward on working with us despite the fact they plan to build a competing service since they want to be where the merchants are. They do use Connect for Venmo, but will use fingerprinting for checkout instead of Connect.
 - Stripe / Cybersource: Ready to proceed without major concerns.
 - Pages team reviewed Buy on Facebook with Zuck. It is a good fit with Payments 3.0, but will likely not get worked on until Q2.
- Canvas Payments / Payment Engine
 - PJ's team reallocated Zong/Boku traffic which will drive up several million in annual TPV by giving more traffic to the outperforming partner by country
 - Reviewed the top recommendations on increasing TPV, working on getting in the top two low hanging fruit
 - Alt-Pay back on track for end of November. That should finish off most of the core work on PE and prepare us to get new games on.
- Core Payments
 - Two SEVs this week. Both were caused by different infrastructure teams. Going to figure out if we can make any process changes to reduce the chance of future SEVs and mitigate the effect of ones that still happen. Also working on more granular ODS reporting.
 - Shipping developer self-editing of financial entity information next week. Previous to this change, Jean Son needed to make all of these changes.

Mobile App Installs Ads (Project Neko)

- Status – Continue to struggle with delivery this week after the avalanche of changes last week continue to hit us. We are down to about $50K in spend which is 1/2 to a 1/3 of last week.
- Possible Rootcauses
 - Neko can't appear in position 1; reverted on Wednesday
 - Neko appears in lower positions if it loses the auction - revert with next feed push. This is likely causing our ads to insert low and then not get clicked. Our ads are unique because they are tied to an app ID, and we keep ads from showing up more than once per 3 days (though other ads get around this by changing designs which we cannot do right now).
 - Neko performance boost no longer implemented; David getting in change by 5pm cutoff and will be reverted with next feed push (hopefully tomorrow) – This is likely a huge source of our delivery issues.
- Plans to avoid this – Short term, we will manually monitor major feed changes. Longer term, Neko and all other business lines will be included in Ads monitoring tools.
- eCTR – Looking at increasing eCTR slightly to push more delivery since a lot of our inventory is just above the floor. Starling and FPAN will provide much needed cheaper inventory for us to serve Neko Ads. Working on getting a few Neko partners into the Starling tests (see below).

- New design – Testing started yesterday on Faceweb and m-site – looking at data shortly
- Fab design customization – Kicking off test today

Payments –

- Payments All-Hands – Shared current status and Payments 3.0 plans with larger cross-functional team - team is really excited about new mobile payments direction
- Payments Engine – Alt-Pay planned to be complete by the end of November. Sharing more with game developers in the onsite game event in mid-November.
- Payments 3.0 – Very promising conversation with Braintree on building Pay 3.0 with us. Meeting with PayPal and Stripe next week. Trying to find alignment with PayPal on their integration into our wallet.
- Buy on Facebook – Zuck excited about Buying on Facebook, Pages, Karma and Payments team collaborating on what it would take to build. Payments 3.0 is the exact engine needed to build it. Will likely need to partner for inventory management and links to backend systems
- Credential Harvesting – Working on plans to test out the cost to acquire credentials for users with a high probability of spending on mobile

Mobile App Installs Ads (Project Neko) –

- Status – Exceeded $100K every day this week, but total revenues fluctuated between $110K and $160K. Ran into a few issues this week including the delay of the new Wilde with bigger unit and the turning off of all OG stories in Wilde. This is the second time the dependency on OG has caused a delivery issue for us.
- Performance – Major keys to performance:
 - Neko oCPM model (huge need)– Ads team needs at least a month to make the change given their other priorities, so they will likely not get to it until the end of the year. Current oCPM model lacks the right features to optimize for Neko installs.
 - Price floor – Many of our ads are close to or just above the price floor, as a result we are delivering less than 10% of these budgets <https://our.intern.facebook.com/intern/data/nekobasic> Our previous price floor drops have resulted in significant loss of total revenues since there is no way to target lowering of reserve to Neko. We are testing slight increases in the eCTR to see if that drives more delivery.
 - New Wilde – Next version of Wilde has been held up in Apple review, so larger unit has not launched. This continues to be an issue for us
 - Other – Lowering of frequency cap from 7 days to 3 days (this week), in-app install (Dec), creative customization (Dec), bidding inventory into Starling where CPMs will be lower (rolling, most ramp will start at end of Dec to Q1),
- Partners – Sales is meeting with all of the top 10 partners (budgets of $20K+) and asking them about their happiness with Neko ads and how we can help unlock spend.
- LTV End Point – Thanks to the efforts of Vijaye and Greg to get the code snippet to Fab. They agreed to include in their next app submission in mid-November. This will be a good test of our end point in the market.
- New Unit Design – Checked in, will start testing next week on m-site (see samples below)

- FPAN – FPAN SDK is now with 4 partners, TinyCo and Stitcher are submitting this week, and Gamelot and Flixter will submit in next few weeks.

- Staffing update – 5 new engineers just joined the team from bootcamp in past 2 weeks, including an engineer from Google Payments!
- Canvas Revenue Conversion Sprint – Focus on perf, carrier billing, mobile subsidies, and country-by-country investigations – Brazilian payments fixes will result in ~$15M in fixes
- Payment Engine – Working on getting Boku and perhaps Zong out by end of November. Alt-pay reports on PE are now live!
- Promoted Posts – Made up 20% of our new payers for the week, TPV between $60K and $100K day, rollout cross-promotions for testing with employees
- Payments 3.0 – Fab.com, Sneekpeek, and Shopify interested in running Payments 3.0 tests with us. Had promising discussions with PayPal and Braintree. PayPal was worried we were going to build another PayPal (master merchant). Braintree open to discussing “universal checkout” with us. We are pushing forward quickly on partnerships discussions over the next two weeks.
- Payments All-Hands on Thursday

Mobile App Installs Ads (Project Neko) –

- Performance – Had a huge day yesterday and delivered 150% of the ads impressions from the week before! Unfortunately, Wilde click logging was broken so we were not charging for ads for the past 2 days (discovered accidentally by our analysts). This makes up 1/3 of our revenues. For example, Big Fish Games has budget caps up to $150K per day, and we were making <$1000. Note that the long term impact is not known since it would appear that our impressions were not getting any clicks, so the models may push prices up for these ads in the future. Currently at around $85K per day until the Wilde logging fix is out and we get updated reports.
- LTV End Point – Fab really excited about the end point for calculating LTV and bidding oCPM against paying users. We are looking for a way to get into their app which will be submitted shortly.
- New Unit Design – New unit suggested by Zuck has been designed. Will code it up for testing.
- FPAN – TinyCo integrated our Ad SDK into the latest app and submitted it to app store – once approved, we will be in alpha with first partner! Two others coming along by early November.
- Finalized v2 roadmap – see below

Payments –

- Staffing is a major issue on the team right now with the loss of 5 engineers. Ramp in asks from multiple teams plus the prep for 3.0 has crunched the team quite a bit. This week 3 bootcampers agreed to join. Met with all of the key stakeholders who have payments ask and kicking off new process to prioritize needs from across the company.
- Payment Engine – Alt-Pay is behind due to engineering attrition, working on a new timeline given the resourcing situation.
- Boosts is fully rolled on 10/11. Saw a single $100K day and then down to the $50 to $70K range. 60% of payers are new to our system. Rolling out the ability for friends and fans to promote posts. Contact rates (mostly due to confusion) are 3% which is very high relative to game payments.
- Major subscription sev last week where we charged users over and over some dozens of time. Ops proactively working on making users whole including some who got NSF charges due to us overdrawing their account.
- Payments 3.0 workplan and key milestones drafted – Signed on our first app, promising discussion with Stripe, and due diligence with Braintree showed integration should be straightforward. Biggest risk is being able to sign on the right partners.

Mobile App Installs Ads (Project Neko) –

- Launched this Wednesday! First full day had revenues of $86K and 128 apps.
- Huge unbreak-now with the launch of the new Android app yesterday which caused major mobile devs' apps to crash when they try to access our attribution ID. Working on getting fix out over weekend or on Monday.
- Fixing a few other scattered bugs which are causing issues with delivery.
- Kicking off v2 roadmap work next week.

Payments – Reviewed the strategy for Payments 3.0 (Facebook Identity + Wallet) with Zuck and got approval to start designing the product and engage with potential partners. Looking forward to building out one-click mobile payments linked to Facebook identity. Working on process to field, prioritize and support payments requests from various orgs in the company. Running into an issue where Facebook

Gift Cards in retail stores cannot be used on Karma gifts, a point of user confusion without an easy solution.

Sponsored App Installs (Project Neko) – Launching on Wednesday, the 15th! Cleared the final bugs, delivered Device Targeting, and have 5 partners spending at scale. We are currently bringing in around $70K+ per day. Partners actually have more budget, but we are starting to run into delivery issues. Working on improving performance of ads with some promising results including the Google Play icon (click to install rate improved by 2% - from 7.5% to 9.5%) and creative customization (improved +20% to 50% CTR). Also building out Neko specific features into ads optimization.

Payments – Promoted posts out this week as a test in the US. Congrats to Reshma who has been leading this effort! Finalizing timeline for Payment Engine migration – 90 day breaking change announcement in early Jan with final cutover in April. Fleshing out test plan for Payments 3.0 including Buy Button on site.

Sponsored App Installs (Project Neko) – Revenues for yesterday = $70K+, 3x what we were seeing earlier in the week. This resulted from the mid-week fix for the eCTR overestimation from last week. We are spending through partner budgets and are seeing 3x delivery at the prices partners are willing to pay which hovers around $2 to $2.50 CPI. Already today we are seeing increased budgets from partners. True device targeting (iOS + iPhone/iPad) is now checked in. We will open up to partners over the weekend. Those are final two gating changes for launch. Now we are waiting on getting 5 partners spending $10K+ as the final gate to launch. Early results from our first oCPM test shows it is about 2x more efficient than straight CPC buying and will get further results next week. We are also running a few tests on how to improve performance like adding the word “free” and testing the Google Play icon in the ad. Given we cleared the final launch blocking items this week, we are aiming to launch October 15th.

<image017.png>

[note this includes only spenders of $500 or more and the CTRs are lower than most other feed stories due to the 3 unit in Wilde – new Wilde unit goes out in next release]

Just a quick update.

We pushed out the CTR overestimation on Friday and CPCs went down by half. Unfortunately, while we achieved the CPCs (and thus CPIs) we wanted, there was a bug introduced in the way the overestimation was coded up which caused us to deliver the same number of ads. So basically, we served exactly the same number of ads and made half of the money. This issue affect us and offers. The ads engineer who is helping us with this is going to push an fix tomorrow, so we should see improved results from there.

Payments – Karma integration went live this week and is v1 of the internal payments platform. Kudos to Reshma for delivering on this important system! This sets the stage for many future monetization initiatives within FB. Finishing up the final subscriptions features over next couple of weeks, and then focusing on getting adoption. Promising discussions with PayPal, Braintree, and Stripe on partnering with us on Payments 3.0. Currently designing tests for wiring up onsite Buy buttons.

Sponsored App Installs (Project Neko) – After a couple weeks of focused work by the team, all major Power Editor issues are now resolved! Today we turned on overestimation of CTR to 4x on Wilde and 2x everywhere else, effectively halving CPC from about $.23 to $.11. We picked this level because our tests show that we have sufficient improvements in the pipeline (e.g. single unit in Wilde, exclusion for apps, customization), so that we can dial this back without affecting overall CPIs. The goal is to get within the right CPI levels to trigger developer spend, get our SDK adopted, and move to oCPM buying which will be likely 20% to 50% more efficient. Phase 1 of Device Targeting launched in the API, and a couple PMDs are starting with test with it. This will also be available in Power Editor next week which should remove at least 5 to 10% of wasted inventory and benefit all advertisers who want to focus ads on a specific device. Our first oCPM test is set up to run over the weekend which will start the process for CPI buying.

Note that oCPM is a variant of CPI though there are small differences in how we bill.

Here's an attempt to make slide 3 less confusing — is this better? Sam — you'll want to tweak my language but I tried to make this more intelligible for the board who is not as close to this stuff as we are Moving Forward...

1. Baseline housekeeping:

- Introduce an annual fee for developers -- reduce spam and recover nominal costs
- Charge developers for use of API's -- increase efficiency, reduce expenses and recover nominal costs
- * Deprecate API's that are not valuable — if developers aren't willing to pay for it, we should not offer it

2. Improve value exchange for non-games part of platform:

A. Distribution

- Stop artificially "boosting" distribution for free — developers can buy sponsored stories if they want more traffic from FB
- * Open up new paid distribution channels beyond newsfeed — e.g. notifications, bookmarks, messages, invitations, etc.
- * Give developers the ability to target ads to non-connected users -- e.g. users who land on their sites/apps but don't connect, friends of connected users, etc.
- * Launch ad network on mobile (and eventually desktop) -- help developers monetize their apps and give us a way to generate incremental revenue from our platform

B. Data

- Charge developers for use of API's — beyond nominal cost recovery, introduce a fee structure that will generate material revenue
- Introduce new "premium" paid API's that would be particularly valuable to certain industries — e.g. authenticity data for banking/commerce industry
- Develop partnerships with value-added 3rd-party services to supply data in exchange for revenue-share and/or equity — e.g. fraud services

It'll be a hybrid of 2 and 3. As the plan is to enforce once we have greater clarity on the product modifications, we'll step back from a 3/28 date, work with Fran and some SPM/SPD to flush out use cases and messaging. Is there a PM we should loop into this just to ensure we're all on the same page?

1. We should be enforcing on games, per a different policy if memory serves.
2. Just to be clear with the below, I wasn't saying that we wouldn't enforce, I was saying that we aren't likely to change the way that canvas non-games work (which we closed on today).
3. Based on the same meeting today, I think we are going to hold off on enforcing this policy for non-games for a little while longer because of an in-flight product decision around invites that we hope to land next week. With that in mind, what is your recommendation on the options you enumerate below?

Hey Doug,

Wanted to get clarification here on the canvas redirect:

- We've been enforcing on games, is that still fine?
- For non games on canvas we communicated with the SPM/SPDs 2 weeks ago (2/18) and gave a 3/28 date for enforcement. We have a few options:
 - Stay the course: reminder notifications and enforce on 3/28
 - Pull back on communication and enforcement: 3/28 comes and goes and for those that came into compliance, great and those that did nothing, fine. We would not follow up or moratorium them at all
 - Challenge here is if a dev calls out another dev for auto redirect, we're inconsistent in our communication and actions
 - About face: re-message to the SPMs/SPDs what you outlined below [re-focusing our channels and that for now we will allow this behavior] and no other communication/action necessary

I realize those are fairly prescriptive, but wanted to make sure I'm aligned in understanding. Based on your input, I'll loop in Swain and Fran to ensure we've got a buttoned up messaging ready to go.

Thanks
Ellen

I think we are largely going to leave canvas alone from a navigational distribution (bookmarks, notifications, etc.) standpoint for non-games (this is a change that George and I agreed to over the weekend).

We slated to discuss this tomorrow in a little more detail.

I think we basically want to tell partners that on desktop web, we are refocusing our channels, etc. on the way they were intended — canvas, not connect for bookmarks and requests.

Note that they can use all this on mobile get fine, so this is just desktop web.

I want to make sure that we're giving the right guidance to Amazon (and other partners) as we look out over a 6-month time horizon. It feels like the current sequence is that we will (1) restrict canvas redirects and then (2) make changes to the APIs which collectively make it more challenging for non-games to get organic distribution on canvas.

If this is the plan, I'm concerned with advising partners to "move core elements to canvas" to address the redirect policy enforcement. That guidance seems suboptimal if upcoming API changes will make it more difficult for those apps to succeed on canvas. Doug, what's your take on this?

Hi Justin/Doug,

Running into some issues on how we should handle auto-redirect enforcement with Amazon. At this time, we're holding off on notif removals, but moving forward with enforcing auto-redirects as if they don't go hand and hand. If we enforce against auto-redirects, we're essentially removing notifs and this would break 3 of Amazon's integrations.

Our current guidance is to tell partners to either (1) remove the canvas url or (2) move core elements to canvas. #1 is not an option for Amazon right now. Also, if we're planning to eventually remove notifs it seems like a waste of resource and unnecessary thrash for Amazon to tackle #2 especially since we don't know if or when we'll remove notifs.

Additionally, we approved their integrations when this wasn't an issue and would need to respect our 6 month backward compatibility clause if we were to remove. At this time I'm wondering:

1/ if it makes more sense to lump auto-redirect and notif removal together and not enforce the auto-redirect with Amazon at this time given how we've rolled back notif removal

2/ if we can make sure to present Amazon with a 6 month notice of removal to respect the Platform Agreement with them - else, they'll likely no longer want to integrate with us given the thrash we've presented in other areas of enforcement.

Let me know your thoughts.

Thanks!

A quick update - we're looking into an extension as the current hardline date for auto-removal of redirects is 3/28. We won't be able to grant an exception, but looking into whether we can extend the time to allow you to either:

- Remove your app's Canvas integration by removing the "App on Facebook" and "Canvas URL" from Basic Settings. This will not affect any Connect or mobile integrations your app may have.
- OR bring core elements of your app onto Facebook Canvas. Core elements do not include trivial elements such as splash pages or registration forms that redirect off Canvas.

Will circle back once I get confirmation of being able to extend the enforcement date.

Sorry to hear that - hope you're feeling better.

Regarding api/integration approvals, our policy supersedes the approval as the assumption is that your use of the functionality is within platform policy. Given that we're not deprecating approved functionality but enforcing policy around incorrect usage, this will be the internal hurdle. So let me work through this with folks on our end. One of the solutions might be Amazon translating a similar birthday gifting experience on your canvas (i.e. Dropping users to a birthday gift flow on your canvas) at which you're no longer redirecting. Specific outlined solutions for this policy violation are the below:

- Remove your app's Canvas integration by removing the "App on Facebook" and "Canvas URL" from Basic Settings. This will not affect any Connect or mobile integrations your app may have.
- OR bring core elements of your app onto Facebook Canvas. Core elements do not include trivial elements such as splash pages or registration forms that redirect off Canvas.

Let me know if you have any thoughts around this proposal in the meantime while I discuss with folks on our end.

Hope you feel better soon ~

Jackie,

Sorry, I ended up going home sick today so a bit tardy in response. We do rely on this to support our user to user notifications that we worked with you guys on. Earlier was the Student invite scenario, Save with Friends (invite friends to receive a social coupon), and most prominently Amazon Birthday Gift which need this to invite friends to join a gift (customer sends invite/notification to friend, friend clicks through, and then land them on Amazon Birthday Gift.

I've attached some emails discussing this, but all these integrations were reviewed with you and approved. I hope to be back by tomorrow but this could be somewhat impactful. Would like to discuss or understand options.

No policy changes - this policy has always existed. We now have technology to fully detect and enforce this. Please let me know by tomorrow as this auto-enforcement dialog will push out tomorrow which means everyone with the notice will have by March 7th to address this policy issue and I'll need to get in front of this early if this is a large issue on your end.

Jackie – has the policy around this changed? Can you explain why the enforcement now?

We did have some reasons, but will need to dig in (can't recall the full specifics). Let me talk to folks and will get back to you.

Hi Cory,

Sorry for being the bearer of bad news lately, but I have another heads up to give regarding auto-enforcement that will be going out to app ids currently in violation.

For Amazon apps:
164734381262 <https://developers.facebook.com/apps/164734381262/summary>
115829135094686 <https://developers.facebook.com/apps/115829135094686/summary>

These apps are currently facilitating canvas redirecting off-site. I can't remember if there was a specific reason why this is in place as I want to make sure I surface this asap with our policy team and look into workarounds on my end.

Otherwise, if the canvas redirects don't currently serve a deficiency, we'll need you to make some changes to keep your app in good standing. Please address the issue below by March 7, 2013 by removing the 'App on Facebook' section of your app dashboard:

<image001.png>

Let me know if you want to chat through live and if there's an immediate issue for me to escalate/look into on my end.

Thanks again,
Jackie

However Games on Canvas with Credits will automatically get this. The other main use case for non-app-friends (NAF) is tagging, but we're building a tagging API to satisfy this case.

Given that, there are VERY few cases where we want an app to have non-app friends. This ability will be gated by the capability. However, we still want apps to be able to request access to NAF, but not make this a core part of the developer experience.

So, in the Login Review flow, we need some copy, with a link to a help-center form where devs can request access to NAF, and explain why.

Submissions should be routed to DevOps, and from there to Platform Product (Eddie, Simon, Ilya, Doug) for review.

If the app has a legitimate case, we'll add them to the correct Capability in order to access NAF, assuming the user has granted the user_friends permission in the GDP.

Some apps have a valid use case to access non-app friends. Examples:

- Venmo allow you to send a payment to a non-app friend
- Bing needs this to display public data from your friends which they acquired via the firehose

As such, we will need a new capability: "can_read_non_app_friends"

When apps with this capability request /me/friends AND where the user has granted the user_friends permissions, the API will return the full set of the users friends, including friends who have not TOS'd this app.

Subject: Re: All-Hands: "Understand Everything" section

The new script is simpler, though it's also a bit less concrete about what we're doing in H2 — that may be totally fine, just mentioning it in case that wasn't intentional.

One nit:

"It took a little bit of time, but Graph Search is now rolled-out to 75% of EN_US, and will be out to 100% of EN_US shortly."
--> We're basically at 100% now. We have a 2% hold-out, but other than that it's fully launched to en-us. Also, while it was slower than we planned, it wasn't that slow of a roll-out. I believe Lightstand, for example, which launched at the same time is still not rolled out to 100%.

And to respond to your comments:

"This is obviously your call, but I worry about investing a lot of time in making photo search better. I think we need to be figuring out entity search (people, places, and media) because I think this pattern is where the long-term strategic value of Graph Search lies."

--> We could be wrong, but our sense is that post search is going to be pretty huge. Searching entities are definitely of strategic value to FB, but in terms of what people want and come to FB for, it's the content: photos and posts. Right now we're explicitly focusing on what people are already searching for, as opposed to trying to create new search behaviors. Depending on where we are at the H2 it may make sense to start branching into new search behaviors.

"I still think we should get media (music, tv, movies, books) into the Graph Search index for H2, and the platform team is signed-up to help with that."

--> They're already in the index — our initial launch included support for all of those things:

<https://www.facebook.com/search/me/friends/pages-liked/musician/pages/intersect>

<https://www.facebook.com/search/me/friends/pages-liked/movie/pages/intersect>

<https://www.facebook.com/search/me/friends/pages-liked/tv-show/pages/intersect>

<https://www.facebook.com/search/me/friends/pages-liked/book/pages/intersect>

We're just not planning to focus on improving those experiences in H2.

"I dropped Hunch from the all-hands, but just wanted to say that I think Hunch and keyword search are really solving the same problem."

--> I disagree. Keyword is about reducing friction to searching when people have an intent in mind, while Hunch is about pushing discovery even when the user has no specific intent. They're solving similar problems, but I think they're pretty different and lead to working on very different things.

Hope this helps,
Tom

Subject: Re: All-Hands: "Understand Everything" section

Ok - thanks for all this feedback. I completely rewrote the script (from scratch, attached) - it was too long and a little convoluted. I went for something much shorter and to the point. I think it accurately reflects below, but you should correct me if not.

A couple of discussion points on below, though:

- This is obviously your call, but I worry about investing a lot of time in making photo search better. I think we need to be figuring out entity search (people, places, and media) because I think this pattern is where the long-term strategic value of Graph Search lies. We can obviously do a great job with photo search (and we have), but I worry it's so different than everything else that getting good at that doesn't really make the whole system better.

- As a minor clarification on the above - in the H1/H2 review, I agreed with the feedback that we should make people + place search really, really good before we build custom experiences for media. Just to clarify my comments - I still think we should get media (music, tv, movies, books) into the Graph Search index for H2, and the platform team is signed-up to help with that. Getting those data sets into the graph is a necessary feature for Hunch. I just wouldn't spend time building a custom search experience for that data until we do an amazing job with people + place search.

- I dropped Hunch from the all-hands, but just wanted to say that I think Hunch and keyword search are really solving the same problem. There's so much power -- beautiful power -- in Graph Search, but it's just not that accessible yet. I think both products are trying to make that power more accessible. Keyword searching simplifies the language you have to use to do a search. I think Graph Search teaches people about the search you can do, and shows you all the queries you might want right now, at once. They're obviously different solutions, but I do think they're addressing the same potential problem.

Subject: Re: All-Hands: "Understand Everything" section

This narrative generally makes sense, but I have suggested changes for the entities and search parts:

- I'd frame the things Graph Search needs to focus on a bit differently. Right now you have (1) continue rolling out (iOS, i18n, Android) and (2) make more approachable (Hunch). I'd change that to:
 1. continue rolling out (iOS, post search, Android)
 2. improve the product (focus on what people are already searching for on FB: predominantly people search)
 3. make it more approachable (keyword search)
- To give a bit more detail on those 3:
 1. We're not focusing on i18n yet. The big parts to finish rolling this out are giving mobile users a way to search and giving them a way to search over everything (posts is the big piece missing right now). Then we'll make sure the product is really good, then we'll start i18n.
 2. Our major focus this half will be to improve the experience for things people already search for on FB. This is people search predominantly, though we'll do work on photos and places, too. Our strategy will be to make these things really great before trying to move users to new search behavior.
 3. Our answer to making Graph Search more approachable is keyword search, not Hunch. Happy to provide whatever info you need here, but the problem with our highly-specific grammar is that it requires too much cognitive load up front to come up with a very specific intent. Keyword search will allow broader, less-specific queries and give users a way to define a more specific intent on the results page.
 - Hunch is more about creating a better null state / on-ramps to queries users may not think of on their own. To be honest, I don't think we should mention it at an all-hands yet.

- Fix the Graph poster: You may want to call out the Entities team and/or Philip Bohannon who leads it by name here. That team has done a ton of great work and often gets lost in the recognition/praise that's given to the product teams that benefit from their work. (E.g., profile inferences, places quality/dedup work, etc.) They'd really appreciate the shout-out.
 - Also, calling the current state of dedupe a mess is probably fine, but you should at least acknowledge the progress the Entities team has already made there. It's less of a mess now than it was a year ago, way less than 2 years ago.
 - If you want graphs here that show progress and the current gap, I'm sure we can pull those together.
 - FYI, this phrase in particular will rub a bunch of people the wrong way: "The various entities teams across the company". Yes, the OG folks in London did some work on entities, but they built off the infrastructure, expertise, and multiple years of work by the Entities team. We've recently been considering org changes that would move some of the Entities team to Location, but that hasn't happened yet and to date all the places quality/dedupe/etc work has been done by Philip's Entities team.

Hope this helps,
Tom

Subject: All-Hands: "Understand Everything" section

Hey everyone -

FYI, the company all-hands is next week. Mark is going to frame-up our strategy for the second half around four themes (what he's calling "the formula"):

- Increase the # of people on Facebook (growth, Javi)
- Increase the time they spend on Facebook (engagement, Cox)
- Increase the amount of utility they get from that experience (understanding, Vernal)
- Increase our efficiency at monetization those experiences (ads, Boz - efficiency, Jay)

My section is the most nebulous - it's intended to cover search, nearby, entities, identity, and open graph.

The first draft of my script is below (wrote it last night / this morning). I'm representing a lot of areas that I don't directly work on, so please give me feedback both on the overall content, but also on how I'm representing your areas.

Thanks - appreciate any and all feedback, and please give me the benefit of the doubt if I got some of the details wrong about your particular area (and please help me correct them!).

-mike

// Cox finishing up ...

[Formula Slide, Highlighting "Understand Everything"]

The third variable in "The Formula" is "utility-per-time spent."

In other words, "how much utility do you get out of your Facebook experience?"

And how do we make it more useful?

[News Feed Slide]

Today, people come to Facebook to see what their friends are up to.

Through News Feed, they discover tons of awesome stuff:

[Click] - Awesome restaurants your friends are visiting (La Ciccia, in Noe Valley)

[Click] - That all of your friends are watching Game of Thrones (and something insane happens in episode 9)

[Click] - That gay pride is this weekend, and everyone's going to be there

But people are discovering this incidentally.

When people actually have questions about this stuff -- when they're looking for a restaurant, or what to do this weekend, or what to read next - they're not using Facebook.

And that's crazy. All this knowledge exists on Facebook. We should have the best answers to these questions.

But they're not using us today. They're not using us yet.

[Blank Slide]

Let me stop myself for a second.

You might be asking yourselves -- haven't we been talking about this vision forever?

Didn't we launch Open Graph two years ago? Nearby a year ago? Graph Search six months ago?

Are those products working yet? If not, why are we continuing with the same strategy?

First, you're right. The basic strategy hasn't changed.

[TBD Slide]

The basic strategy is to:

1. Give people the tools for sharing their experiences with their friends and the world, and
2. Build tools that help you search over and discover things from that knowledge. From that repository of human experience.

There are some things we've done well. [click] Minutiae is awesome - people seem to really like it.

There are some things we've totally screwed-up -- [click] social reading was a disaster.

But while we might mistakes in the tactics, that doesn't mean that the strategy is wrong -- that the vision is wrong.

I really believe in this vision. I believe that we are building a system that lets you share your human experience, and that helps you make your experience -- your time on this earth -- better, through the experiences of others. And I think that's a system worth building.

And I really think we're close -- with Graph Search rolling out, we have all the key pieces in place.

We just need to take all these pieces and make them work really well, end-to-end.

[Entities, Connections, Discovery]

So how are we going to do it?

There are three problems we need to focus on.

We need to have great representations of all the entities in the world.

We need to optimize our tools for connecting with and sharing your experiences with those entities.

We need to finish launching the discovery tools we have, and then make them do a few things really well.

[Entities: Fix The Graph poster]

We actually have most of the entities in the world on Facebook already. The problem is we have hundreds of copies of each. It's a mess. Hanging in one of the bathrooms in MPK is this poster. It speaks for itself.

We need to clean all this up.

This is a hard problem, but it's also solvable. We have the technology. We just need to focus on a few specific verticals and start making them better day-over-day, week-over-week, and month-over-month. We did this in the last half by focusing on music, movies, and books, and we're now pretty good at them. We just need to keep dividing this problem into solvable chunks, solving them, and then moving on to the next chunk. The various entities teams across the company are focused on this for H2.

[Connections: Minutiae, Ratings + Reviews unit]

Once we have all these entities, we need to understand how people are connected to them.

When you're checking-in to a movie theatre, we should ask you what movie you're watching. And then a day or two later, we should ask you what you thought of it.

Same thing for check-ins - if you checked-in at a restaurant, we should ask you a few days later what you thought.

On Platform, one of our main goals is to get another 85M people to fill out their movie, music, and book tastes on their profile. For Nearby, one of their main goals is to get another 27M high-quality reviews into the system. Again, we have all the right tools in place. We just need to make them really effective.

[Discovery: Graph Search]

The last key piece is graph search. It's the foundational technology for querying all this information. It's one of the most powerful tools we've ever built. And as of this week, it's rolled-out to 100% of US users.

There are two main challenges we have to tackle this half.

[Discovery: Mobile UI]

First, we need to continue rolling this out by shipping the mobile interface on iOS, and then getting started on I18N and Android.

Second, we need to make it more approachable. Graph Search is an incredibly powerful tool, but it's also a little bit intimidating.

[Discovery: Hunch]

One idea we're exploring is Hunch.

We think there's all this incredibly valuable information in the graph, but it takes too much work to extract it today.

We're going to make it easier. When you tap on the search bar, we'll show you a bunch of things that you can do right now, or tonight, or this weekend. And all of this is built on top of Graph Search. When it's Saturday at 10 am, and you tap on the search bar, you'll see a card for "Brunch Places near San Francisco." Tapping into that will just launch into the mobile graph search experience.

[Click] Or if you're traveling, we'll highlight things like friends of yours that live in this city, or the most popular places to visit while there.

It's kind of like the very first version of News Feed -- there was all this incredibly valuable information on people's profiles, but you had to work too hard to find it. News Feed brought the important information to the forefront. Hunch is about making search even more useful, by bringing the interesting queries for you right now to the forefront.

[Entities, Connections, Discovery (Redux)]

We have the technology. We have all the key pieces to start unlocking the knowledge in the graph, and making Facebook a more useful place.

We just need to focus on execution.

We need to improve the quality and coverage of our entity graph.

We need to optimize for meaningful connections between people and those entities.

We need to finish rolling out our discovery tools and make them really good for a few key scenarios.

[Blank Slide]

This might seem daunting - we've been working on this for a while, this involves a lot of different teams and a lot of different technologies. But I just wanted to share a quick story.

For years, the Platform team has built tools for developers. And the Ads team has built tools for advertisers. And we didn't really talk. Most of our developers were also advertisers, but internally we were just focused on our silos - we weren't thinking about how all this worked, end-to-end.

A year ago, we started on this project called Neko. The idea was to combine our developer tools and our Ads system into a single product to help developers become successful advertisers on mobile.

It was hard. Most people thought it would fail. In December of last year, we spent hours in that room (point to the Aquarium) debating whether to shut the whole thing down. We almost did. Why throw good money after bad, people kept asking?

Then something happened. We hit a tipping point. We fixed that one last bug, and suddenly the entire system start working. And it's been growing ever since.

The Neko experience has taught me two things.

[ParkMe Slide]

First, we can be a great discovery product. I've installed dozens of apps via Neko that are really useful. A few months ago, I found this awesome app called ParkMe, which helps you find the closest parking spot in San Francisco. I would never have gone looking for that app. Never. But Facebook helped me find that, and it made my life a little bit better.

[Neko Revenue Growth]

Second, it's working. It's grown from nothing to $1.75M/day in nine months. That's a $600M business in less than a year. That's insane!

And it didn't cost us $600M to build it. This was a team of hundreds. It was a small team working across platform + ads to build an end-to-end solution.

That's how I feel about where we are with search, nearby, open graph, and similar products. We have all the pieces. We just need to make it work really well, end-to-end. This half is about execution and getting the end-to-end experience to be awesome. If we can do that, I really believe we'll make Facebook a far more useful -- and valuable -- tool for people than it even is today.

[Formula Slide]

And making Facebook more useful is how we increase utility per time spent.

With that, let me hand it over to Boz.

- If you access any user data or the friend graph, you have to implement full reciprocity
- If you access the friend graph, you have to implement full reciprocity (you can always access user data)

The world I (strongly) don't want to be in is the "if you want to use our APIs, you have to publish data back to us (even if it doesn't make sense for your app)".

First, you are reading things in the wrong order and this email only makes sense in the context of the first mail.

Second, I don't want to get to this level of detail with Dan and Justin. I have 2 PMs working on this issue and I want them to help determine the right thing to do based on core principles we construct and really usage data (we make dumb decisions in the room with a bunch of directors and no data).

In terms of reciprocity, I work here and I don't even know what you said (hyperbole), so I think the model you outline is really hard to follow so we should discuss.

Thanks for writing this up.

I have a lot of thoughts. I'll try to keep this succinct.

Reciprocity - as the inventor of reciprocity, I think the vision I had for this has gotten distorted a little bit. Here's where _I_ think we ended-up in November:

- User Data - users can always bring their data to third-party apps (the photos they uploaded, the likes they made, etc.)
- Friend Data - we are removing the ability to access non-PAI for friends
- Categorical Reciprocity - if an app developer reads a certain type of user data (e.g., photos), and the user can also create new data of this kind in your app (new photos), the developer must:
 - Offer a prominent way to share this back to Facebook
 - Implement the Action Importer API so that users can import this type of data into Facebook
- Social Reciprocity - if an app developer reads the friend graph, then they must also:
 - Offer a prominent way to share all social actions back to Facebook
 - Implement the Action Importer API so that users can import their actions into Facebook

The really important difference here is that I (strongly) think we should continue to support apps that offer compelling, social experiences, even if those apps don't have any natural sharing back to Facebook. If an app creates data or creates social actions, I think users need to be able to bring that data back to Facebook, but if an app doesn't create any data or social actions, we shouldn't ban that app. I feel really strongly about this, but I think there's either disagreement or confusion on this point (you wrote this below, I've heard Justin say this, I've heard Dan say this, so we may need to discuss).

Strategic Competitors - I think your wording/framing below is too nuanced. I think this is basically "there is a very small number of apps that have been flagged as strategic competitors. All of their uses of our platform (ads, identity, and app services) require prior review/approval from Mark."

API Classes - you are correct in channeling me. I thought about this for a little while, and here's a suggested framing:

- Read
 - Login (uid, name, profile pic, small # of core fields) - anyone can get this. No a priori review.
 - User Data - requires user_* permissions. Ability to ask for those user_* permissions requires unified review.
 - Friend List - Requires unified review. If you access the friend list, you must conform with Social Reciprocity, as defined above.
 - Friend Data - we're removing this (removing friend_ permissions)*
 - Core Facebook Features (News Feed API, Inbox API, Full Search API, etc.) - requires unified review. Generally only available with a business deal, generally limited to Facebook replacement apps.
- Write
 - Share Dialog - anyone can use
 - Open Graph (defining actions, using the API) - requires unified review
 - Other Write/Management APIs (events, groups, etc.) - requires unified review. Generally requires a business deal, only available to Facebook replacement apps.
- Distribution
 - Bookmarks - limited to canvas apps + mobile games. Requires unified review.
 - Requests - limited to canvas apps + mobile games. Requires unified review.
 - Notifications - limited to canvas apps + mobile games. Requires unified review.
 - App Center + Search - limited to apps that have gone through unified review.
 - Messaging (Invitations) - will require unified review. Available to anyone who abides by our rules (does not spam the channel).

Your Open Questions:

- Non-Writeable Fields - I think we should continue to expose birthday, hometown, etc. We can add write APIs whenever it makes sense, but we shouldn't remove these fields because we don't have write APIs today.
- Canvas apps - I think they're just subject to the same rules as above. I don't think this is an issue if you use my definition of reciprocity.

- Facebook Payments - I think I'd let this stand on its own legs and not couple it to login.

For the meeting tomorrow, I (personally) think the two biggest issues to probably get agreement on is (a) the crisp definition of reciprocity and (b) something like the API classes thing I mention above. Your call - not trying to be prescriptive, but trying to make sure we have an effective conversation.

Subject: Platform Rules of the Road (early draft)

[Below is an broad summary of our app review guidelines. I really want to encode most of this in the devops review tool. Could you folks look at this and comment, flame, whatever?]

As we work towards implementing the decisions that we made last year, which are now known as Platform 3.0, we need a common framework by which we can make decisions about what types of app to give access to Platform. This framework must address three key questions: what are the broad principles of our platform, how do these manifest in our products/policies and how do we communicate this to developers? This document answers these questions, constituting the Platform "rules of the road".

Principles

The fundamental principle that governs Platform usage is a simple concept: reciprocity. Reciprocity involves a equalible value exchange between a 3rd party developer and Facebook. This value exchange involves one of the following from developers: high-quality experiences that FB users can use to tell great stories to their friends and family on FB and/or monetary value in the form of revenue sharing or direct payment. In return, Facebook offers a developers access to our Platform.

When considering the implications of reciprocity it is important to note that a second order principle quickly emerges: competitive access. There are a small number of developers whom no amount of sharing to FB or monetary value can justify giving them access to Platform. These developers do not want to participate in the ecosystem we have created, but rather build their own ecosystem at the expense of our users, other developers and, of course, us. That is something that we will not allow.

Platform Services

In order to outline how the above principles manifest in our products/policies, we need to identify the various parts of Platform. This is required because we have a disjoint set of product and policy constraints that apply to each of these different areas:

App services: these are paid generic services (storage, compute, etc.) that apps may use to build the core foundation of their app. At present, we do not have an offering in this space, but we are close to closing an acquisition that adds these services. As such, in order to be complete and future-proof we will outline the rules associated with these types of services.

Ads services: these are paid promotional services that enable developers to drive awareness and installations of their apps using News Feed and other paid channels. We have always had an advertising business the developers could leverage, but this is increasingly an area of focus for us with the transition to mobile.

Identity services: these are the traditional identity/social services that we have provided to developers since 2007. These services enable developers to build personalized app experiences for people and enable these people to share aspects of those experiences back to Facebook. [todo: payments is here]

Application

The following outlines the application of the above principles to the various kinds of platform services.

Strategic competitors: We maintain a small list of strategic competitors that Mark personally reviewed. Apps produced by the companies on this list are subject to a number of restrictions outlined below. Any usage beyond that specified is not permitted without Mark level sign-off.

Ad services: All developers, save strategic competitors (above), may use our ads services. The reciprocity for these services is clear: money in exchange for new or re-engaged users. In terms of oversight/policy enforcement, we follow the standard ads creative review process.

App services: All developers, save strategic competitors (above), may use our app services. The reciprocity for these services is clear: money in exchange for CPU, data storage and network bandwidth. In terms of oversight/policy enforcement, we will reactive handle any strategic competitors that we discover using these services.

Identity services: this set of services is the subject of much of the rules of the road. This is due to the fact that we have a variety of mechanisms for value exchange.

All developers, including strategic competitors (above), may use the Login and Social Plugin features available within identity services. We permit this because we wish to see our core login service and basic sharing services used by users in any app, creating an equitable relationship with the all, including competitive, developers. To this end, we make these features available to developers with out app review.

The use of identity services, beyond Login and Social Plugins, is subject to app review. We review the apps usage of our APIs to determine if they are adhering to our principles. In particular, we look at the quality of the app's user experience and if there existing some equitable value exchange.

During app review, we determine the quality of the app by using the app and comparing the experience to our quality guidelines [link]. Apps that do not meet our quality bar are rejected.

During app review, we examine the APIs that the app uses in order to determine what the appropriate level of reciprocity. For apps that do not use our payments service (which is direct form of equitable value exchange), the guideline for this review is "take data, give data". For example, if the app accesses the user's photos, the app must offer a prominent mechanism for the user to share new or modified photos back to Facebook. The review tool is built to help with this assessment in that for every read API used by the app, we flag if the app is also writing this data back to Facebook. Using this tool, as well as an examination of the user experience itself, we can determine if the app is reciprocating. If they are not, the app is a "data leach" and will be rejected.

Open Issues

There are a number of different fields like birthday, hometown, etc. that apps can request and there is no way for them to write back anything. We can do a couple of things: create an API to set this info (maybe not a bad idea for identity growth?), limit these data fields to just canvas apps (the value exchange is time on site and maybe payments), pull these fields, something else?

How do we think about the baseline level of value exchange of canvas apps due to time on site? Is that enough to forgo the "take data, give data" mandate for non-payment games/apps?

If you are offering real/world goods for sale on your web site or mobile app, in order to use identity services, you must use Facebook Wallet (Payments 3.0)?

I'm mostly being redundant here, but since I said I'd send my thoughts this morning, here they are:

- As Deb, Doug and Dan have mentioned, there is general agreement that it would be interesting to investigate an off-FB ad buying platform (either ad network or exchange buying) for Neko. The primary reason would be to get a bigger % of developer budgets.
- The biggest constraint is ads engineering resources. Such an expansion outside FB would impact every ads team – interfaces, optimization, targeting, insights, etc. None of them really has the ability to support this, and even if they did, there are higher priority projects in Q2 for each team.
- In Q2, Deb and team will investigate the size of the opportunities we're currently missing, as well as how much additional demand we could drive through Neko ads off-FB.
- In late Q2, we should be able to make the call around doing this in Q3, based on relative priorities and staffing. It will be a joint discussion/decision between Platform and Ads.

Thanks

A couple of things...

1. We are going to investigate a lightweight way to do an "ad control" for app install ads that we could make available in our SDK (stress investigate) in H2.
2. We are staffing more aggressively on Neko, so we should have some engineering bandwidth to do the above.
3. All things being equal, I think doing an acquisition here may be useful not to Neko per se, but to get more ads infrastructure support which could be the real constraint here (but I need to think deeper about it).

fyi, we've looked at chartboost and considered several mobile ad networks and decided the rev traction was not worth a premium to us (the easiest part given our ecosystem and scale to build ourselves) and team/tech were generally not compelling either, and as dan pointed out, other areas took higher priority.

Makes sense. I wonder if there is an argument to try to consolidate the app install space so that we are the biggest game in town when it comes to moving up the charts. Was wondering if we had properly modeled in the upside you might get from scale in this area given the importance of how developers buy ads against chart boosting. Trying to figure out a way to be more than just a commodity player selling installs.

I heard Zynga guys saying Chartboost had very stable API. Also I think Zynga just signed up. So it might be decent tech and team, but don't really know.

I think there's general agreement that we want a mobile ad network. Independent of the supply/demand debate, there's clearly more low-cost inventory outside of FB that we could monetize with an ad network. The problem right now isn't lack of desire, it's lack of engineering resources relative to all of the other work that the ads team is working on (the platform team might have resources to build this in H2, although that route will still require some work from ads eng).

Acquiring an ad network seems like it could end up being more work than building it ourselves. At the end of the day we need it to be integrated into our ad system, so it's going to require ads engineering resources either way.

I'm also not sure we need to pay for an ad network's revenue since we've proven that we can ramp quickly in this space.

Amin — can you have your team do some work on this?

I wonder if we should be thinking about something like Chartboost strategically. Chartboost has an API that from what I hear is very well built. They have signed up a large number of developers and they allow those developers to cross promote within their own games as well as sell inventory to other devs. It is an easy way for devs to help promote apps and drive revenue – the two most key functions.

Essentially it would become a Neko ad network. The strongest logic against this is that we are “demand constrained” on Neko and thus an ad network is just bringing supply. But I think we have heard some indications that this may be too simplistic a view and we should challenge that.

We may be missing larger potential campaigns today. By having access to broader volume and reach we could capture the bulk of the big “chart boosting” campaigns that are out there.

In addition, purely viewing this as a supply/demand business makes us less likely to be able to strategically “lock in” developers to our API. We would also have the benefit of providing a combined FB/Chartboost API that would provide developers with access to both social features and monetization via ads.

Should we have Brendan or someone take a crack at modeling it out in more detail? If we already have and rejected, no worries. I just think given that it sounded like “demand constraint” may not be the definitive issue.

You could of course build this functionality but that is clearly 6 months out so you are looking at 2014.

I agree we should do this.

I think a complementary issue is that I think we've been trying to carve to stark a distinction between "Open Graph" and "Games" in a way that suggests that each is a vertical that is kind of the peer of the other. I think this is the wrong framing, because it makes issues that span the entire platform feel unowned, and it also muddles our ability to talk to developers with a single, unified voice (Doug is scheduling a bunch of mobile developer events, and I think the Games team was a little miffed that they were planning to talk to Games developers at this event).

I think part of this is stemming from trying to draw a really strong line where Sean could only work George + Vishu on games stuff (and, frankly, kind of ignore feedback from Doug, me, etc.).

I think in addition to more clearly articulate the end state we're going to get to and how we're going to get there with platform 3.0, we should also re-clarify that there is a single team that deals with developers (platform, lead by Doug on the PM side and Vlad on the Eng side) and that Games and Open Graph are both types of apps that sit on top of that. I think that would have also been a much cleaner story with the bookmarks/notification changes, because I think it created this really weird gap between Doug + George that ultimately caused ball's to be dropped.

If you just agree, let's just clarify this via email (I can draft something). If you don't, let's chat about it at next 1:1?

I'm worried that we are executing platform 3.0 via piecemeal changes (notifications, bookmarks, API deprecation, etc). I think we should clarify our strategy so that people understand how all of these changes fit together. My suggestion is that we communicate this internally first via a platform all-hands, then communicate externally to developers. The sooner we do this, the less thrash we will cause for partners.

Apologies for the potentially ignorant question, but I thought we didn't give partners access to a user's news feed. What are they actually accessing when they get the permission for "Access to posts in your News Feed"? This would be precisely what Apple wants (and then they'd filter it), but I thought we only had given the API to a few select partners (Windows Phone for their app, Flipboard, maybe a couple others).

They do ask for a lot of data in our GDP, including access to the user's News Feed, so theoretically they could cull that for signals although I'm not sure how useful it would actually be given the chance of Y! stories showing up there enough to make a difference. If yes, then Apple may pick up on it and ask for the same feed of shared articles which is what we have been telling them we won't give them. If no, we are fine as they are just ranking by your likes and clicks on yahoo articles.

+1. Can we also get an endpoint I can hit on Facebook to ask FB to repull my feed? This would allow a developer to potentially just publish a feed and ping FB when it needs to update. That is a much more reliable way to publish if you aren't ready to do the asynchronous tier.

Also, one other benefit of this is that it could make configuring your open graph implementation and even reviewing the implementation easier for us since we can pull in historical data.

Imagine for example if the on boarding process for building an og integration involved supplying us with a Json file or feed URL with historical content that you want to publish. Then you can design your collections and news stories using real data from this feed. Much more tangible.

tl;dr - I think we need to require apps to implement an API endpoint for us to hit for historical data, but still strongly encourage apps to use the OG API for real-time publishing.

Background

Why did we start investigating Action Importers in the first place? We found that there was this leverage imbalance between us and our partners. We exposed our value via an API that partners could call at will, with great flexibility. We gave them access to our crown jewels, and they had complete control over how to integrate it. On the flip side, if we wanted something in return -- some value from the partner -- we basically had to cajole them into giving it to us. We had to create a contract, get them to promise to integrate with us, and then send our BD + Pops team after them to integrate it. It was easy for partners to promise to do something, but then fall back on schedule priorities, bugs, etc. as excuses for why something wasn't done.

Case and point -- Spotify happily agreed to integrate our subscriptions at a 10% rev share last year when we signed the deal. We still don't have them integrated, and they're (subtly) dragging their heels about integrating it. We can yell at them about this, and we can threaten to pull the plug, but they just keep tell us they're working on it and they need more time. For the sake of the relationship, we give them more time.

Basically, we're in a position of low leverage.

The theory behind Action Importers was that we needed to balance the leverage. You can call our APIs and access our data, as long as we can call your APIs (if you have them) or crawl your web site (if not) and access your data.

It's one thing to drag your heels, but if we're the ones doing the work then we force you to make a decision -- either you allow us access to your data, or you block us. If you block us, then it's really easy/straightforward for us to decide to block you.

That's the basic theory/strategy behind action importers - to require partners to give us an API, so we're both exposing APIs to each other and can access each others' data.

What's Changed?

When we first starting discussing this, we were talking about doing this only for top partners. I think a lot of folks interpreted this as just a negotiation tactic -- we'd just threaten to do this if they didn't cooperate. I think this is part of the reason we haven't made much progress here - every time we talk about this, someone says "oh, well the partner is just going to shut us down, so why are we wasting our time on this." (To be clear, I never thought this was "just a negotiation tactic," but that perception seemed pretty widespread.)

What's changed between then and now is that this is now very clearly not a negotiation tactic -- this is literally the strategy for the read-side of our platform. Our strategy is basically -- you can access our social graph, as long as we can access your social actions (both with user consent).

Pull (Feeds) vs. Push (API) for Historical Data

I think we all agree there should be a way to import all your activity from an app form Timeline.

There are two ways to implement this -- you can either require the app to implement some endpoint we can hit (pull-based approach, or a feed), or you can ping the app when the user turns this on, and require the app publish all the back actions to you via our API (the push-based approach).

I'm pretty strongly convinced that, for historical data, this has to be a feed-based approach. Reasons:

- Technical Reliability -- when a user turns this on, we may be importing hundreds or thousands of actions. Transferring all this data might take minutes (maybe even hours, worst case). For partners, they'll need to build a separate service (or something like the async tier) to be able to reliably do this -- they won't just be able to do this in callback handler when we ping them. This is a bunch of complexity. On our side, if they try to write to us too quickly, it's possible that they'll overwhelm one of our UDBs and cause us to start erroring out. Figuring out this failed and making sure the partner retries this is going to be hugely complex for each partner, etc.

Worse, what if their background syncing service crashes for a few hours, or a day. We'll need them to be make it robust to these kinds of failures by replaying all those actions once it actually comes back up. They'll need to build a message queue or a transaction log. This adds more and more complexity.

A feed-based approach is technically much simpler. They have to write an endpoint that reads their actions out of their DB and returns them as a JSON blob. We can build the retry logic if things fail. We can implement rate-limiting/throttling once and have it work for all partners.

Net, I think the feed approach will clearly be way more reliable.

- Auditability - it needs to be really easy for us to verify that we're actually getting the data we're supposed to be getting. With a feed approach, I think it's easy -- you look at the data in the endpoint, you look at the site, and if something is missing you flag it. You can always go back to the feed as the authoritative source of truth, and it would be really easy for us to build a tool for POPS to help them verify/audit this stuff.

With the push API, I think it's just unnecessarily more complicated. We'd need to do something where we poke them, get them to re-publish all their historical actions, and then look at those. What we'd probably do is build a tool that has a test account, drops all the actions from the app, pokes it to re-push them, and then looks at the apps activity log. We could do that, but it's just so much more complex than being able to look at an URL in a browser and see the list of all your actions.

Net, both are auditable but the feed approach is clearly easier to audit (especially for real users).

- Leverage - the feed model clearly has more leverage. Either the feed is there and has all the data, or it doesn't. If it doesn't, it's really black-and-white and is easy for us to turn off our endpoint until its fixed. We can integrate it as we see fit, etc.

The push model is just much worse here. If they're not pushing data to us, first we need to detect it. then we need to escalate to them, but it's then on them to fix and publish the actions they missed. It would be easy for a partner to selectively break this, cause a bunch of actions to get dropped, and make this feel like a busted experience to users. (If you don't think partners would do this, look at what we did with the Contacts API for Apple). They could do this with the feed approach as well, but it's much harder to justify/defend.

Net, net -- it's pretty clear to me that the feed-based approach is way, way better for importing historical actions.

Pull (Feeds) vs. Push (API) for Current/Future Data

On the flip side, it's pretty clear that the API wins for future data. Any pull model will have some latency, and that creates a crappy user experience (you take a photo on instagram, but it doesn't show up on facebook for 10 hours). You can fix this by having some ping/fat-ping model (like we do with our own push service), but that adds complexity.

If we had never launched an API, I think you could make an argument for only doing feeds + fat-pings. Since we already have the API, I think it would be insane to deprecate it and replace it with a more complex system (fat pings).

So this suggests to me that we should definitely keep the API for actions that are published as you do them.

Integrating The Two

Anyway, here's probably what I would do:

- Use the feed for historical data (pre-Connecting)
- Use an API for actions after Connecting
- Have some background task that probably re-pulls the feed once a month (in case any of the API publishes fail)

Sorry for the long note, but I feel really strongly that we should have a feed-based approach for historical data, and so I want to make sure everyone understands why. If you disagree w/ my logic, please raise your concerns/disagreements.

I'm not sure I agree (that's not why we just used feeds). I think this is part of the confusion about this stuff. I very explicitly wanted a feed architecture for inspect ability reasons. This is also why I've been asking for a spec / conversation about this.

I don't think we want to replace the way Open Graph. I just want a mechanism for historical importing. Feeds have all kinds of drawbacks (latency, etc.).

But I'll think about how these two relate, as it is a little crazy to have double implement push and pull. Anyone else thought about this?

OK. so one more question - is the idea that this model might actually replace the current open graph API for how a developer should publish content to Facebook?

Frankly, as a developer just writing a feed endpoint for Facebook seems like a much simpler task than having to modify a bunch of different call sites in my app to proactively post content to Facebook.

Rose & Mike:

Rose's one pager has this to say about reciprocity:

If a partner use the Facebook API to get data about a Facebook user, they must allow Facebook to also use their APIs to get data for their users who are on Facebook (with user consent). If the partner has an API, we will use that mechanism. We also reserve the right to crawl the partner website for the user's data. Partners cannot blacklist or block Facebook from crawling your site or using the API. If they do, Facebook reserves the right to block the partner from using our APIs.

(If there are load balancing or technical issues, Facebook will work with partner to resolve them

Does this mean that for a developer to meet our reciprocity requirement they need to simply be willing to let us access their data if we ask for it? Or do they need to actively publish their content to Facebook to quality?

i.e. This paragraph implies that as long as the partner is willing to expose their content to Facebook, it is our problem to actually pull that data in. vs making it a requirement that they actively publish it?

As background, we want to alleviate the following cases:

1. Partner has implemented, but isn't selling sharing / OG on their site well. We'd like the ability to upsell this from Facebook, and have the ability to bulk import.
2. In addition to the above, we'd like the ability to do this on an ongoing basis. (We need to specify how this will work, push/pull/etc.)

Separately from the above, we also need to figure out how to get partners to provide good metadata. Many partners (e.g. Kindle, Pinterest) provide only enough data to generate a story. We'd like the data to be more detailed. I don't know if this falls within the concepts of data reciprocity though. Mike?

Per Doug's request, I recalculated the expected rev for basic read APIs to include all calls to the Pages and App APIs (in addition to User and Photo APIs outside of canvas). I applied the same growth rate math we get:

API Usage Fees on Current > 2013 - $7M, 18mo RR - $9M

Also - I noticed that the deck now shows our 2013 @ $6M with an 18mo RR @ $100M. I don't see how charging for our current read APIs gets anywhere close to that.

For one, the vast majority of based data reads happen on canvas today. For those that do not, the integrations tend to be light touch and/or intended to work around limitations of our sharing system [such as not being able to precision target users with our requests dialog.]

I don't see a value exchange with enough developers that makes sense at this level. The most likely outcome if we start to charge is that many devs will simply stop using us.

Maybe it's not important since a $10, or $20 , or $100 projection wouldn't change the outcome of our decisions at this level, but my guess it you will get questions about it at the very least; it looks funny.

Sorry, continue to read through this and think about it - trying to respond in real-time.

Two more thoughts:

Slide 9:

- The Contextual Ads part is really not part of the "Write API" - it's really a separate topic. Here's what I would change:
 - Ditch the two contextual ads line items
 - Add another bullet after those channels that says "Apps bid on install-value and reengagement value, and we optimize across all these channels" to acknowledge the way Mark wants to charge for this

Add Slide:

Title: Become a Marketplace

- Current OG Sponsored Story Problem
 - Our best developers can generate good OG actions, but don't have a lot of money to spend on advertising
 - Our best advertisers have a lot of money to spend on advertising, but can't generate OG actions
 - Many early developers have a product, but lack a business model / revenue stream
- Solution
 - Enable advertisers to attach sponsored actions to OG content
 - Mike read a book on Goodreads - Buy on Amazon
 - Sam rated a movie on Rotten Tomatoes - Watch on Netflix
 - Sponsoring boosts story and attaches a prominent UI action link
 - Rev-share with developer to align incentive and provide revenue stream
- Long-term
 - If/when we are inventory constrained on Facebook, enable developers to attach these links on their own sites

Slide 10 (will now be Slide 11):

- I'd probably put "Marketplace" on the left, next to "Monetize partner data + give them a cut of the value." (We're monetizing both distribution + data, but what we're really doing is building a marketplace between advertisers + data generators.)

Slide 10:

- Isn't it a "cost-recovery+" model, not a "value-based pricing" model? We're not going to charge different amounts for different API calls, right? Also, I would move the developer fee here (from Slide 11). Slide 11 feels like controversial proposals. I actually think charging for API usage is more controversial than developer fee, so I'd just include developer fee here. How about:

"Charge developers for launching apps ($100/year) and for use of APIs (on a cost-recovery+ pricing model), starting with a graduated pay scale charging larger developers more"

- Can we change "Introduce concepts which allow us to be comfortable with some uses of our data (reciprocity?)" to "Require data reciprocity as a principle and a policy; for top partners/competitors, require a deal where we can let users import their data in exchange for read API access."

Slide 11:

- I would kill developer fee from here.

- I would add a separate point which is to shift our API from being UID-based to having app-specific user IDs, which I think merits conversation. I think this is separate from the contact info point, but worth discussing.

NB:

Two other opportunities Mark mailed us about where (a) not showing ads on canvas and (b) allowing custom GDP. It feels like we should at least mention them so we can discuss, though we obviously don't have any #s yet for them.

Otherwise, this lgtm.

This is great, thanks for putting it together.

Slide 3: I think the "we are enabling competitors" might be too subtle. The real issue here is this -- we don't have a set of rules where we are really comfortable with folks like Path, Pinterest, and others integrating with us.

One of the things we've talked about is a principle of reciprocity. I'm actually pretty excited about that model -- I really think it's the best model we've found for how we'd work with Path, Pinterest, etc. -- we'll let them access some of our data, as long as they provide endpoints that let us access + import their data, too. This reciprocity model is also the equilibrium we found in the Contact Importer sphere (Microsoft + Y! shut us down until we agreed to reciprocal access, then did work to let them make API calls against us).

I'd love to somehow frame up in this deck that (a) we allow competitors to leach info out of the graph today, which makes us uncomfortable, and (b) our solution is a combination of restricting what data you can read and requiring reciprocity (key developers have to expose APIs/access to their data so we can import it).

At the very least I'd like to have a conversation about this because I think the "enabling competitors" is one of the two biggest issues (the other is monetization) and it's a little buried right now.

Slide 4:

Annual Developer Program - one of the things we don't really price into this model is a question as to whether we need to raise our service levels to credibly charge for our platform. E.g., I think we put developers through a lot of shit today, but it's somewhat defensible that it's a "free platform" (even though people are building multi-$100M businesses on it). I do wonder if we are being unrealistic about not needing to staff up more eng to service what we have. (This is what I thought the 10 Eng represented, and thought it was a savvy point - but I guess I just extrapolated.) Certainly I think you need some ratio of "dev support engineers" to SWEs to have the SWEs servicing the issues the others are raising, so its impractical to assume that we can scale one without scaling the other. Unless someone has a different feeling here, I'd probably put this at 5 Eng (SWEs) and keep the note about them being for support/QA.

Device Integration Partners - same point. If we make the ADP # 5, then I'd keep this at 3.

Premium API features - the disconnect between $3 (20130 and $140 (18mo RR) is really strange. Are we using the same assumptions for those two numbers?

Slide 7: I think it's worth calling out that this is proposing a huge departure from our current model (removing access to friend data), so it's worth calling out why, the risks involved, and being clear this is a point for discussion.

--

Slide 9: Can we re-add the revenue, maybe in parentheses, after each of the channels? Want to emphasize the point that Neko dominates, so we can talk about whether we should just focus on Neko vs. pursuing all these opportunities.

--

Lastly, just FYI - the Insights team is pivoting towards custom app analytics to help support Neko. Talking to Greg S., I think the killer scenario he sees is:

- Apps incorporate our SDKs, get anonymous logging w/ demographics for free
- Regardless of whether the user logs in, app can log events like "user purchase - $5" with us
- We can store that edge in a structured way and then let developers eventually tell us to optimize installs for user spend

I think of this as part of the Neko opportunity (why I put 10 engineers against it), but since you mention it in the last slide want to call out that we're already starting work on this.

Subject: Re: Platform Market Estimates: Write-API v0

Overall, this is really good. A few thoughts:

- Resources. I agree that we should only specify eng/design resources to be consistent with how other groups are approaching the exercise.
- Slide 2. I might add a second bullet under the "value to developers" column/"data" row. It feels like the reason a lot of developers integrate with platform is to "capture user data for future monetization potential" (or something like that). This type of developer asks for many GDP permissions with no real intention of personalizing the experience.
- Slide 3. Similarly, an additional problem on the "data" row is that we "undermine user trust" by creating a dynamic where users give away a lot of data without getting any pay off in return.
- Slide 5. There is a typo in the 4th dash under the 1st bullet (it should read "we provide" rather than "provides"). Also, I wonder if it might be clearer if it reads "we provide a small number of official...".
- Slide 8. The "ramping to ~$100M" seems inconsistent with slide 4 which has the 18-month run rate opportunity at $140M.
- Slide 9. The $350-400M opportunity seems inconsistent with slide 4 which has the 2013 opportunity at $321M (sum of the 2013 revenue for write APIs) and 18-month run rate opportunity at $463M (sum of the 18-month run rate revenue).
- Slide 10. The "launch ad network on mobile" bullet seemed like a somewhat new concept based on the previous slides (the other bullets summarized previous discussion points). However, it feels ok because a lot of the subsequent slides begin to extend into new discussion areas as well.

charles: can you respond to the other thread here:

1: my understanding is that we made two changes in the assumptions: a 50% drop-off and only including /user API calls. I think the dropoff is fine, but I need to understand the latter better to have an opinion, particularly if it includes /page calls, etc. As it stands $10 seems low to me.

2. My assumptions were straightforward: number of apps created last year * $100. There will clearly be some drop off here. Perhaps we decided to charge by Dev not app?

3. Last slide: we absolutely want to do the anonymous targeting of invites, stream.publish, etc. in the next rev of the SDK. In short, no more GDP or UIDs for a bunch scenarios. Charles can send you his deck on this.

(2) on the annual developer fee — we also had a difference between showing $7 in the matrix fro 18mo RR, vs. doug having $17 — I am less concerned about this one since it probably isn't answer changing... but we should have a single answer.

Also, on the design front for Contextual Ads - I think 1 design resource would be enough. I don't know what 3 designers would do across those products.

- The $30 mil sponsored search is for FB.com search. The $1 mil is for mobile search.
- Out of sponsored search today $11k is games, 2k are apps, 2k are pages. By end of year as the market fully uses the product we assume about 5x that in run rate (~$80k), but I'm assumed the same approximate breakdown. I didn't see a huge growth in sponsored Open Graph App searches on web, but I might be missing something. (Seems most OG apps aren't big APRU or SEM companies – e.g. path, pinterest, WaPO, etc. Perhaps Spotify, TripAdvisor, etc. and some others would be spenders, but likely eclipsed by games.) Let me know if you see some opportunity that I missed here.

Chad: Paid Messaging for FB is charging a user to directly message another user (like LinkedIn). Paid Messaging API is charging an app to directly message a user.

Matt, regarding the eng/design resource estimates, Sheryl really pushed the ads team to increase their initial estimates to ensure that we have sufficient resources to ship things on time. Her perspective is that we historically underresource projects, and that teams should ask for more resources up front to ensure that we make the right trade-offs across projects. As a result, the initial FTE estimates for the ads team were often doubled or tripled after discussion in the room.

I think it will be important to use a similar approach in pulling together the estimates for platform to ensure that we do an accurate comparison across the potential opportunities.

Matt - thanks for pulling this together; this is awesome and really helps put in perspective of the scope of these opportunities (e.g., in particular, it makes clear that Neko dominates these other channels and so tees up a healthy debate about investing more in Neko vs. premium-izing these channels).

A couple of questions:

- Sponsored search results - in the #s you say $30M, and then in the description you say that it's $<1M/year. Can you help explain the difference? Is it that all the $30M would come from canvas apps?
- More generally, it would be useful to understand for this projection, how much of this comes from Canvas apps vs. Open Graph apps (i.e., all non-Canvas apps). Sponsored search results / sponsored placement in app center are pure new opportunities, so understand that you might be counting both canvas and open graph apps in that.

Chad - re: paid messaging, I think Schrep is estimating out recruiting, dating, non-friend. I think messages from platform apps/developers to users is another scenario we've talked about. We should be estimating that opportunity (developer->user messaging), but not the broader one.

Here is what we have so far.

Couple of notes (1) we are missing sponsored stories, as we still haven't tracked down ads estimate; (2) we tried to err on the side of being conservative with numbers, but they can change pretty drastically depending on assumptions. We think they give some general idea of the size. But feel free to push back / alter estimates with different assumptions.

Will resend once we get sponsored stories estimates, but know that Vernal asked for something today, so wanted to send what we had in all its rough glory. In the meantime feel free to ping with any q's/comments.

Premium Write-API $ Estimate Summary

Total 2013 50/50: $271 million (doesn't yet include sponsored stories)

Total 18 month run-rate: $350 million (doesn't include sponsored stories)

PM/Eng/Design Investment: 1 PM, 3 Eng for 6 months. (Need to double check with eng; we are largely doing most of this on the front/dev end, so mostly a matter of backend system / payments.)

Risks: A lot of this revolves around Apple/Goog allowing us to charge for push notifis, which they could disallow. Many of these (e.g. notifications/direct messaging) could have poor user experiences if too aggressive. Questionable how devs will respond if we limit free channels too much given free alternatives (address book, SMS, GameCenter, push notifis, etc.)

Detail:

Invitations (mobile)

- What: promoted invitations to pop a notification jewel, or buzz phone.

- 2013 50/50 rev: $14 million

- 18 month run-rate: $28 million

- Logic:

-- Today we have 60m outbound invite clicks per month on mobile and we estimate about 6m installs (we don't have install data, but assume 10% install rate similar to Neko). Of these 6 million installs, we assume 10% of these would be paid/promoted for at $1 cost per install. That's ~$7m annual business today. For mobile growth we assumed 200% mobile growth next 18 months (based on analyst estimates). We also assumed a 200% increase in apps becoming more social and using inviting mechanic over next 18 months. Currently our canvas ecosystem has about 30 million invites per month (5x the mobile volume), so we felt there should be just as much need for invites on mobile once the ecosystem matures. We discounted 500% to 200% to account for there being other channels on mobile (Gamecenter, email, text, etc.). This gives us $28 million 18 month run-rate. If you wanted to be more aggressive, you could assume a 300 or 400% increase in how social mobile games become.

-- 2013 we brought down estimate that it would take time to really get devs to start paying learn how to adopt invites into the game, and at least Q1 until we started charging. (Note today we have trouble getting devs to use invites for free, as mobile devs aren't used to building social games. We only recently launched reasonable invites on mobile that devs are starting to use.)

Notifications / Paid Messaging

- What: Paid A2U notifications from apps you have already installed. Potentially showing up as a notification, push notif, pinned to feed, inbox message, etc. Charged per-click (re-engagement).
- 2013 50/50 rev: $15 million
- 18 month run-rate: $30 million
- Logic: Re-engagements are generally worth 0.25% of a new user (dev feedback), and we believe that there is potentially 8x the volume. (On canvas we generate 8m re-engagements / day vs installs of 1m / day; this could get bigger with A2U notifications.) So one could say that the opportunity should be roughly twice as big as invites. But phones have a pretty significant competitive (free) channel: push notifs. So we thought directionally this would be similar to invite opportunity.

Neko

- What: Mobile app installs
- 2013 50/50 rev: $200M (just for reference, TapJoy was on $150M run rate a few quarters ago)
- 18 month run-rate: $260M
- Logic: this is from Deb's longer Neko analysis, which we won't rewrite here.

Sponsored Stories

- 2013 revenue: ____
- 18 month run-rate: ____
- Trying to get numbers from sales team.

Sponsored Search Results

- 2013 revenue: $30 million
- 18 month run-rate: $30 million
- Logic:
-- Canvas: Virtually all of sponsored search on canvas are platform apps (13k/15k). Estimate for eoy run-rate is around $30million / year (sales team estimate).
-- Mobile outbound for search is tiny (~300k new apps are clicked on from search each month, which gives us an estimated 30k installs x $1 per install x 10% paid = < $1million / yr). So we don't think sponsored mobile search is going to be a significant opportunity worth modeling further.
-- Growth: Assume no growth, as it's canvas.

Sponsored Placement in App Center

- 2013 revenue: $18m
- 18 month run-rate: $18m
- Logic:
-- Canvas: Well-placed apps in App Center (top of lists, across all categories) currently drive 6M install / month. Assume a top ad placement for each list at $1 CPI, losing 75% click-through due to the fact that it's an ad. $18 million / year.
-- Mobile: Doesn't drive sufficient traffic to charge. Ansible may change that, which could double or triple the opportunity if successful.
-- Growth: Assumes we can be up and running by Jan 2013 with a unit. Assume no growth, as it's canvas.

Thanks for meeting / sorry for the randomization.

For each of the below areas, we're looking for the following stats:

- 2013 50/50 Revenue Estimate
- 18 Month Run Rate
- PM/Eng/Design Investment
- Any substantial risks to note (e.g., "Apple could shut this whole thing down.")

Charles:

- Annual Dev Fee
- Device Integration Partners
- API Usage Charing (revenue, efficiency savings, and savings from removing friends.* APIs)
- Premium Read APIs
 - Coefficient
 - SI
 - User-to-user path

Matt:

- Premium Write APIs
 - Invitations
 - Notifications(?)
 - Apps You May Like (Neko)
 - Sponsored Stories
 - Paid Messaging
 - Sponsored placement in App Center
 - Sponsored search results

Deb:

- Contextual ads on FB
- Contextual ads on third-party sites

Sam/Boland:

- CRM / Ad Targeting Scenario
- Third-party data exchange

Can you just reply to this thread w/ this data?

Thanks - sorry for the rush.

Mark Zuckerberg:

>I've been thinking about platform business model a lot this weekend.

>

>One thing I've been thinking about a lot this is that we really should start a payments product for real-world goods and offer it at a much lower rate outside of canvas. Mobile apps need something like this for real-world purchases as well since iOS only does virtual goods. If we layer in a service like this with our login, then that's a pretty awesome combo and a good reason for people to use FB platform.

>I also think that if we make it so devs can generate revenue for us in different ways, then it makes it more acceptable for us to charge them quite a bit more for using platform. The basic idea is that any other revenue you generate for us earns you a credit towards whatever fees you owe us for using platform. For most developers, this would probably cover the cost completely. So instead of actually ever paying us directly, they'd just use our payments or ads products.

>

>A basic model could be:

>

>- Login with Facebook is always free

>- Pushing content to Facebook is always free

>- Reading anything, including friends, costs a lot of money. Perhaps on the order of ~$0.10 / user each year.

>For the money that you owe, you can cover it in any of the following ways:

>

>- Buy ads from us in neko or another system

>- Run our ads in your app or website (canvas apps already do this)

>- Use our payments

>- Sell your items in our Karma store

>Or if the revenue we get from those doesn't add up to more than the fees you owe us, then you just pay us the fee directly.

>

>The rate of $0.10 / user each year might even be too low. For example, at that rate Spotify would have to spend just $3m per year with us in ads to be even and Pinterest would be around there too. We might be able to get this number to be meaningfully higher, especially if we don't charge until a dev has a meaningful number of users, like 50k or 100k.

>I've been reading a lot of books on finance and banking recently, and even though the idea of an information bank is not identical to financial bank, the comparison suggests some interesting things.

>

>For example, banks charge you interest for as long as you have their money out. Rather than letting devs pay a one time fee to fetch data, we could effectively do this by mandating that devs must keep data fresh and update their data each month for anything they call.

>Another idea is charging different developers different rates for things. The whole banking industry is based on charging people different rates. It may be that instead of having a flat fee for everyone, we should instead try set a norm where there's some range but the expectation is each developer gets some rate specific to them once they're at scale.

>Anyhow, those are just a few thoughts. We should haven't finalized our plan here yet so we should keep discussing this.

>

>In the meantime, I'd love to spin up an effort to build a real-world payments product for devs outside of canvas.

Douglas Purdy:

>1. We are beginning to work on a payment product that will work for real-world goods/services. We can review where we are with you next week.

>2. We are currently executing on the paid developer program ($99 for app) that we are plan on rolling out in January. We are still working through the plan for API calls. I suggest that we spend some time tomorrow discussing what you outline here.

Christopher Daniels:

>I like the idea of giving our best partners/customers discounts on other offerings we have. Two thoughts, however: 1) for the things that we choose to charge for and make a profitable business out of, we should have confidence in our pricing such that we don't have to give anything away for free because each provides equal or more value than we charge. Said differently, if our prices are set correctly, nobody will expect us to give anything away for free because what we charge provides enough value. I want to seek a profitable business model for platform on its own before we start to think about packages/bundling. 2) rather than crediting revenue dollar for dollar, we should trade value based on the margin we earn. For example, a dollar of gross revenue from karma is much less profitable than from our ads business, so we shouldn't trade them 1:1.

Michael LeBeau:

>Hey guys, as you all know the growth team is planning on shipping a permissions update on Android at the end of this month. They are going to include the "read call log" permission, which will trigger the Android permissions dialog on update, requiring users to accept the update. They will then provide an in-app opt-in NUX for a feature that lets you continuously upload your SMS and call log history to Facebook to be used for improving things like PYMK, coefficient calculation, feed ranking, etc.

>This is a pretty high-risk thing to do from a PR perspective but it appears that the growth team will charge ahead and do it.

>

>Separately, Gravity team had been intending to ship the Bluetooth permission on Android at the same time - in fact we'd already delayed to accommodate more permissions from the growth team, but we didn't realize it was going to be something this risky. We think the risk of PR fallout here is high, and there's some chance that Bluetooth will get pulled into the PR fallout. Screenshot of the scary Android permissions screen becomes a meme (as it has in the past), propagates around the web, it gets press attention, and enterprising journalists dig into what exactly the new update is requesting, then write stories about "Facebook uses new Android update to pry into your private life in ever more terrifying ways - reading your call logs, tracking you in businesses with beacons, etc".

>Gravity had a great initial reception. This is because we took painstaking steps to ensure that we had a clear story of user value for the hardware and spoke from a position of transparency but not over-emphasis about the potentially scary bits. But we're still in a precarious position of scaling without freaking people out. If a negative meme were to develop around Facebook Bluetooth beacons, businesses could become reticent to accept them from us, and it could stall the project and its strategy entirely.

>So we're still treading very carefully, and of course the growth team is also managing a PR risk of their own with their launch.

>

>Given this, and the fact we have lots to iterate on with iOS, and we can still do non-beacon place tips on Android any time, we've been thinking the safest course of action is to avoid shipping our permission at the same time as "read call log".

>

>Normally we'd have to wait until July for the chance to ship again, since we only ship Android permissions updates a couple times a year as they tank upgrade rates. So our options, aside from the "ship together and pray" option which feels too risky to me, are to wait until July to ship the Bluetooth permission on Android or ask for a special exception to ship our permissions update sooner.

>

>Shipping permissions updates on Android has the downside of tanking upgrade rates, so we try to do it infrequently. But there could be an argument to doing it sooner in this case, as a compromise to allow both teams to continue moving fast, without unnecessarily conflating two PR risks into one.

>

>Wanted to make everyone aware of these options and welcome any thoughts/feedback about this.

Ran Makavy:

>I think separating the introduction of the two permissions to different releases makes sense. If there is a case to have another release before July, that would be a good compromise.

Avichal Garg:

>Yeah we should work with Lindsay and Will to figure out if we can do an intermediate release before six months

Avichal Garg:

>And what the optimal timing for that would be

Yul Kwon:

>(y)

Michael Vernal:

>I acknowledge but tend to be less concerned about this risk than you guys are.

>

>I don't think there's a world where we delay the growth permission to give gravity air cover, so I think the real options are what you layout:

>1. Ship now

>2. Try to get an exception in ~April

>3. Ship in July

>My honest recommendation would probably be to go out with this launch, but if the team collectively feels strong about holding it I would investigate (2).

Yul Kwon:

>Just as a heads up, I was in a separate meeting with Lindsey today, and I got the impression that Release Eng would be very opposed to an intermediate launch. We should definitely explore this, of course, but should expect strong reservations.

Yul Kwon:

>Also, the Growth team is now exploring a path where we only request Read Call Log permission, and hold off on requesting any other permissions for now.

Yul Kwon:

>Based on their initial testing, it seems that this would allow us to upgrade users without subjecting them to an Android permissions dialog at all.

Yul Kwon:

>It would still be a breaking change, so users would have to click to upgrade, but no permissions dialog screen. They're trying to finish testing by tomorrow to see if the behavior holds true across different versions of Android.

Michael Vernal:

>(y)

Yul Kwon:

>Mike V. - The Growth team's meeting with Mark is scheduled for tomorrow at noon. Javi's admin accidentally left you off the invite, so I asked her to add you. She said she was checking with your admin to see if you could make it, but we haven't heard back. Will you be able to join?

Michael Vernal:

We're making solid progress on several of the below analyses including the "top 5-10 partner deals", "FB marginal user analysis", and "policy analysis". More generally, I've been thinking about how best to frame up the discussion on Wednesday. I would think of structuring the deck along the following lines (and plan to take a first cut for everyone to review by EOD Friday):

- Level setting on the status quo: what data do partners "read" from Platform? Key analysis: volume of API calls by data field.
- Understanding the value of "read" data: how valuable is "read" data? Is the value quantifiable? Key analyses:
 - What value do partners perceive from existing data? ("FB marginal user analysis")
 - What value does analogous data have in our ads system? We're mapping ad targeting to platform permissions to evaluate the incremental value of each data field in the context of the ads auction.
 - What data do we not expose today which could have value (e.g., coefficient)? How valuable is this to partners?
 - What incremental value does the data have over other ways in which developers can acquire info (e.g., iOS)?
- Capturing the value of "read" data: what is the best way for FB to capture the value of "read" data? Key analysis: evaluating the pros and cons of the following approaches:
 - Cost plus
 - Price per data field
 - Price per user
 - Ongoing rev share after a user connects
 - Custom BD deals (i.e., "top 5-10 partner deals")
 - "Loss leader": using data to drive incremental value to our ads and payments businesses
- Preserving the value of "read" data: what additional changes to platform are required to maintain the value of the data?
 - API changes: friends' basic info, contact info, extended info, stream API, search API.
 - Policy changes: competing social networks, reciprocity, size-based restrictions.
- Evaluating the risks: what are the risks with the above approaches (e.g., reaction of the developer community)?

Subject: Zuck Follow-Ups & Platform Business Model Conversation Next Week

(FYI for Sam + Dan.)

We have a meeting w/ Zuck + mteam next Wed @ 10am to continue to platform business model conversation.

I'll be out between then and now, but I'll jump on email and take responsibility for framing that conversation with a deck.

I expect that conversation to be 5-10 minutes of framing and then a broader conversation about how we could price this stuff (some extension of Mark's email this morning).

There's a bunch of analysis we have in-flight that I think it would be good to have written down for the meeting, if/when it comes up:

- Top 5-10 Partner Deals - who would we try to strike a deal with, and what would we try to get. Justin, I assume you're driving this? I think it'd be good to have a straw man here so people can react to it.
- FB User Marginal Value Analysis - for FB partners, how much more valuable is an FB user than a non-FB user. Mark keeps hearing FB users are "way more valuable." We keep telling him that's not substantiated (other than Spotify). We should debug this (and make sure we include games in this analysis). Justin, assume you're driving this?
- Loss Leader Analysis - does the read-side of platform drive meaningful marginal value on the distribution side of the business? If we were to yank the read-side, would that harm the distribution business (both current + future)? I assume Justin + Doug driving this (Justin analysis for current value, Doug + Justin for what changes would mean to future monetization).
- API Change Analysis - what is impact on the ecosystem of killing friend information. Doug/Charles/Vlad should drive (we haven't kicked this off yet, but would be good to understand how many apps impacted, biggest apps impacted, whether we'd whitelist folks, etc.)
- Policy Changes - we didn't talk about this on Monday, but we should just be prepared to talk about proposed policy changes. We can just use the slides already prepared.

There are other analyses we're doing, but I don't think they're critical for Wed. We should be doing these and reviewing when ready, though:

- Coefficient Analysis - how would we expose + price coefficient. Charles + Vlad driving.
- OG Monetization Analysis - how valuable is the OG data we're getting, and the opportunity here? Deb/Rohit driving this.
- Click Value Model - how we do change the click value model in feed. Will/Rose driving this.
- Invitations Spec - how we charge for invitations. Assume Gareth is driving this.

Sound reasonable? Anything I missed?

The other one issue is with requiring full reciprocity - which as I understand it means that if you ready any of our social graph then you must publish back all social actions.

In this sense, the developer is no longer in control except that they could opt completely out of our graph. There is no sense of investment matching the reward; I have a potentially high up front cost to get anything out of FB. I don't have a good framework to think about how this will impact adoption yet; but it seems like a high risk.

Yes, I think that complexity is a big deal.

The thing I ultimately liked about the social graph for social actions proposal was that it was pretty concrete. If you added an action to a user's profile on your site, then you had to give the user the option to share that back to Facebook, too. You were in control (by controlling whether you surfaced that action in your app / on your site).

This falls apart if apps don't have social actions.

I can only think of two cases where this really worries me -- commerce + messaging.

For Commerce (Apple, Amazon), you might use the social graph to either (a) improve recommendations or (b) drive gifting in a way that doesn't accrue value to us. I don't know how to defend against this.

This might be ok -- if you're small, then the quality of your social recommendations and your ability to drive gifting will be limited, and once you get big you're subject to our size clause. The duplicate functionality clause also helps us here.

For Messaging (Line, Kakao), you could grow with our graph but not contribute any social actions back. Here, either the duplicate functionality or the size threshold also helps.

Neither of these answers are super satisfying, though. I think we should just flag these cases and discuss tomorrow.

Have we thought about / talked through the complexity and risk we are placing on our developers?

We are asking developers to potentially take on a lot of work in order to integrate with us in the first place, but my concern is that a broadly scoped definition (i.e. "any action you take that is visible to other people") seems like it would introduce a lot of risk for the developer in that they would never know exactly what we might define as in scope / out of scope.

I think Mark's litmus test has been "any action you take that is visible to other people."

I would probably adopt one of these, as I think defining it as "one of four types" is probably too limiting. E.g., I think content creation is clearly in-scope here.

Slide 2-4, 6:

- I think every action in "Other publishable content" I would consider a "Social Action" given above definition.

Slide 5:

- iTunes is interesting, because you can't actually see others' listens, watches, reads, etc. yet. So we should probably adjust this to reflect what is actually visible via Ping today? And the right column should be everything else we might ask for?

- Similar for Amazon, I'm not sure what the split is, but I think the left column should be stuff that is a "Social action" per above definition, and right column should be "other stuff we might ask for"

A quick note to ensure that we're coordinated in preparing for next week's discussion:

- Blog post. Doug and I are working with Jen Taylor and Swain to update the prior draft. We'll circulate it to this team once it's ready.
- Deck? If we're preparing a deck for next week's meeting with Mark, please just let me know if I can be helpful in framing things up. Happy to work with Charles, Vlad, etc.
- Policy. There are a couple of policy issues in Mark's note: (a) implementing the reciprocity policy and (b) strengthening our enforcement approach. Specifically:
 - Reciprocity. I worked with Ali to take a first cut at this policy which incorporates Mike's concept of providing us with the option to prompt users to pull in data from FB. Draft language: "If your app requests additional information beyond a user's public profile, you must provide users with a prominent option to share the social actions they take within your app back to Facebook (such as engaging with your app's content or creating new user connections). You must easily enable this sharing functionality both within your app and by implementing our Action Syncing Protocol."
 - Enforcement. Historically, we've treated policy enforcement as a secondary function of platform. One of my top priorities is to significantly up level this function, and this will begin by hiring a manager with far different capabilities than previous folks. We're close to extending an offer to an internal candidate who fits this profile (e.g., HLS grad, a decade as a federal prosecutor, user privacy and law enforcement experience). I'm also working with Colin to develop a more proactive and strategic approach to enforcement in competitive and other key contexts. We met yesterday and he'll send an a/c privileged summary as a next step (I'll provide more thoughts in the context of his note).

Yeah - I've been bucketing all these changes into something I'm calling "Platform 3.0." Specifically:

- Paid Developer Model
- Removing a bunch of APIs (e.g., all the friend ones)
- New invitations model on iOS, Android, etc.
- Removing non-TOSed Friends
- API charging above a certain usage threshold
- Data reciprocity policy
- Action importer spec
- (Potentially) one premium service, just to set the tone for premium services

I think we need to roll all these changes out together as a big package with heavy messaging. This will likely be similar to the Twitter changes they just launched in terms of impact on the ecosystem.

Re: GDP - I actually think we want to get those changes out earlier, since it's a big user win.

Charles + Vlad are going to own this from a PM + Eng perspective. Starting on a blog post I think would be a really useful way of clarifying what we're doing here. I think below is a pretty reasonable starting point. Maybe someone (Doug?) could update it based on Zuck's most recent note, circulate around, and then we can circulate w/ Zuck via email to see if we are correctly memorializing what he's proposing (maybe shoot for next Tuesday, after the Monday meeting where I expect us to agree on Zuck's proposal).

Sorry, bad communication. I did this as an exercise to see what it would look like if we moved forward with our strawman proposal from the last meeting.

After you guys have a chance to review and weigh-in, we can decide whether it would be useful to send this to the group that met last week as a way to try to move the discussion forward.

We can also just use it as a way to start preparing for whenever a decision gets made. This exercise also made me realize that we might want to include other decisions — like GDP 3.0 and $49/yr — in the broader announcement so that we package all of the platform changes together at once for developers.

Yes, I'm confused too. Can we not show this to Zuck yet (I'm booked and want to read this).

More broadly, I agree w/ Doug - I think we need to better coordinate how we're reviewing this stuff w/ Zuck. I want to review + iterate on this before showing it to Mark.

Next Steps for Facebook Platform

Over the past five years, our platform has evolved from an ecosystem of apps and games that run on Facebook.com. It emerged as a way for websites to personalize their experience and drive traffic, and increasingly is becoming a key way for mobile apps to be discovered and grow.

Regardless of whether you've built a web or mobile app, developers typically plug into Facebook for one or all of these things.

1. Identity and registration: people can quickly get started in your app or game through Facebook login and our native authorization dialogs.
2. Growth: you can tap into channels like news feed, timeline, App Center, Bookmarks and Requests to reach and re-engage your users on Facebook, whether they're on the web, iOS or Android.
3. Promotion: you can use products like Facebook Pages and ads to accelerate and maintain growth.

Over the next few months, we're making several structural improvements to take into account the increasing diversity of apps building with Facebook and the feedback we've received from the people who use your apps. Each change is designed to make it easy to take advantage of the core value our platform provides, improve the experience people have with apps, and build an environment that allows us to continue to invest deeply in the platform.

These changes impact web and mobile apps integrated with Facebook; they do not apply to games that run inside Facebook.com (canvas) where there are different user expectations. Similarly, they don't apply to mobile games that share the same app ID as a canvas game. (paragraph needs to be tuned)

User experience

Helping people quickly get started with apps is one of the core values of our platform, but it's also the area where there's been some confusion and, at times, frustration from users. The following three changes are designed to simplify the experience people have and build long-term trust.

- ? Improving the authorization process: We are splitting the authorization dialog into two distinct screens. By separating these dialogs, it will be easier for people to understand exactly what permissions they are giving your app. The first dialog will allow you to request permission to access the basic and extended information you need to streamline the registration process and enable personalized experiences. The second dialog allows you to request permission to post to Facebook on behalf of someone. People can choose to enable this permission if they want to share information with their friends about their activity in an app, such as the music that they listened to on Spotify or the places that they checked-in on Foursquare.

- ? Reducing what data is shared. We are selectively removing data fields to make it easier for people to understand the information they are sharing with your app. Specifically, lesser used or more sensitive information such as inbox messages; friends' basic info, contact info and extended info; and the Stream API will no longer be available. People will continue to be able to share the most commonly used information to build a social app, such as first and last name, birthday, profile picture, gender, location, user ID and extended info (likes, interests, etc.). (point to documentation for more)
- ? Helping people find their friends. People can continue share their Facebook friend connections with your app, but only for those friends who are already using the app. This way, people can tell your app that they are friends with someone using your app, but not share their entire friend list. This better meets peoples' expectations on how their information is shared. For example, people shouldn't have to share their friends' likes and interests with an app because you would already have that information from when their friend chose to connect to your app.

Shared value exchange

Facebook Platform is designed to enable rich social apps, not to be used as a data export tool. Moving forward, if you give people a way to bring their Facebook data with them to improve the experience in your app, you also need to give them a way to share their app activity on Facebook. This preserves the overall health of the app ecosystem for users, developers and Facebook.

Practically, this means that if you ask someone to share his or her Facebook information with your app to provide a more personalized and social experience, you need to give that person the ability to share the activity from your app back to Facebook. For example, Spotify uses Facebook information to customize their experience, and they allow people to share their listening activity back to Facebook.

We've updated our policies to reflect this, and you can learn more here (link).

Premium and paid services

As many of the top iOS, Android and web apps have invested more in social, one of the most common areas of feedback is related to access to stronger support, as well as the ability to use more advanced features of the platform such as Instant Personalization and our recommendation and ranking capabilities. Today we're making this possible with three paid programs:

- ? Friend connections: We will begin charging for each connection that is revealed between two users of your app. This will allow us to invest in making this functionality as advanced and valuable as possible. (Or lead with: The value of a Facebook-connected user is, on average, X percent more than a non-Facebook user (reference yet to be conducted research or study). Facebook-connected users typically share more and spend more time and money in apps. To allow us to invest in making this functionality as advanced and valuable as possible, we will begin charging a small fee for each connection that is revealed between two users of your app.)
- ? Instant personalization: This program has been used by sites such as TripAdvisor, Rotten Tomatoes, Bing and Yelp to create deeply social experiences. We will continue to roll this out on a whitelisted basis to approved partners. Learn more and apply here (link).
- ? Coefficient: We are creating new APIs to more efficiently surface a person's closest friends in your app. For instance, it could show which friends a person could look to for music recommendations, or friends who share other common interests. Learn more and apply here [link].

(Need to explain or link to how we'll charge/fees/specifics, as well as timing for the rollout)

We'll continue to look for ways to develop more advanced premium services that help you build better social apps and reach more users. By moving to a paid model for this advanced functionality, it sets us up to re-invest in the types of technologies and APIs many of you have asked for.

Professionalizing developer support

We consistently hear the desire from our developer community to fix bugs and provide higher quality technical support. Based on your feedback, we're launching a developer support program that will better match what you've come to expect from other platforms. Developers who integrate with Facebook will be required to pay a flat $49 annual fee per app. In exchange, you will receive 2 technical support incidents from our developer support team. Social plugins and Facebook login (or registration plugin / pending decision) remain free and are separate from this program.

As part of the program, we will also enhance our app review process. Learn more here: (link).

Yes, we'd let them have publish for #2...but every publish use case we discussed felt really forced and awkward. If I was using the app, I wouldn't publish anything.

Their team seems really talented. The app is beautifully designed. The learning algorithms and heuristics they've built (at least what they shared with me) seem well thought out and sophisticated. I bet they could do a bunch more with access to our internal data and engineers.

Do you have a read on how good their team is? Note that I don't like the optics if us going with #2, if we ask that about acqui-hire right now.

Monika, Justin –

I met with the Refresh team again to brainstorm reciprocity in their app. To be very frank, together we struggled (and I still struggle) to identify any value they could provide to FB that would ever be sufficient to equate a reciprocal value exchange. They are taking a ton of data from us. In fact, the closest we got was if they published the professional graph (aka LinkedIn graph) to us, but clearly LinkedIn would shut them off immediately.

Optimistically, I think we have a two real options for Refresh.io:

1. Acqui-hire this team and have them work on this at FB. Reminder that that the Identity team is building a similar UEX. @Sam - Any interest here?

2. Restrict their access to our APIs and data, but let them use login.

If we're not interested in #1, I'd like to move forward and signal #2 to them soon. Ideally, before they continue investing too much in FB. I want to avoid a situation where we let them launch, they get traction, and we're forced to grandfather them in when Platform 3.0 lands.

@Everyone -- Is my thinking off on this? Are there any other options here?

>>>in the future, I also think we should develop a premium service for >>>things like instant personalization and coefficient, but that can be >>>separate from this next release of platform. A lot more details and >>>context below.

>>> First, to answer the question of what we should do, the very first >>>question I developed an opinion on was what we should be optimizing >>>for.

>>> There's a clear tension between platform ubiquity and charging, so >>>it's important to first fully explore what we're trying to get out >>>of platform.

>>> The answer I came to is that we're trying to enable people to share >>>everything they want, and to do it on Facebook. Sometimes the best >>>way to enable people to share something is to have a developer build >>>a special purpose app or network for that type of content and to >>>make that app social by having Facebook plug into it. However, that >>>may be good for the world but it's not good for us unless people >>>also share back to Facebook and that content increases the value of >>>our network. So ultimately, I think the purpose of platform -- even >>>the read side -- is to increase sharing back into Facebook.

>>> If we do this well, we should be able to unlock much more sharing in >>>solve the audience problem partially by giving people different >>>audiences in different apps and linking them all together on >>>Facebook. The current state of the world supports that more social >>>apps enables sharing, so the biggest challenge for us is to link them >>>all together.

>>> This makes it somewhat clearer that we want platform to be >>>ubiquitous and to strongly encourage sharing back to Facebook, but >>>it's not yet definitively clear that having full reciprocity and no >>>charge is optimal.

>>> For one thing, it's conceivable that we'd get more net sharing >>>overall and more net sharing into Facebook if we didn't have a >>>reciprocity mandate. This would be true if many developers dropped >>>out over the reciprocity mandate. The reason I don't think they will >>>is that almost no developers will even be giving us the majority of >>>their data since many of their users won't log in with Facebook and >>>many of those who do won't choose to share it back to Facebook.
>>>Assuming for a heavily FB-dependent app each of those is 50% >>>levels, but if they don't then that probably means they're >>>competitive with us and we're better off not letting them integrate >>>with us anyway. This all makes me think full reciprocity is the way >>>to go.

>>>

>>> For charging, the question is whether we could charge and still

>>> The last question is whether we should include app friends (ie the

>>>This is especially true if we require full reciprocity without >>>offering our most valuable data.

>>> So that's essentially how I got to thinking we should do full >>> reciprocity with app friends and no charge.

>>>

>>> There's some more nuance to this opinion though:

>>>

>>> First, in any model, I'm assuming we enforce our policies against >>>competitors much more strongly. The good news about full reciprocity >>>is that for bigger social companies we might otherwise be worried >>>about, if they're enabling their users to push all of their social >>>content back into Facebook then we're probably fine with them.
>>>However, for folks like WeChat, we need to enforce a lot sooner.

>>> Second, if we're limiting friends to app friends, we need to make >>>sure we build the appropriate distribution tools that developers >>>want to invite the rest of the user's friends. We keep saying that >>>theoretically this is part of the write side platform and it's a >>>premium feature, and those things may be true, but I think we need >>>to build them and make sure they're ready when we roll this out or >>>else we're just taking away functionality without replacing it with >>>something better. It seems like we need some way to fast app switch >>>to the FB app to show a dialog on our side that lets you select >>>which of your friends you want to invite to an app. We need to make >>>sure this experience actually is possible to build and make as good >>>as we want, especially on iOS where we're more constrained. We also >>>need to figure out how we're going to charge for it. I want to make >>>sure this is explicitly tied to pulling non-app friends out of >>>friends.get.

>>>
>>> Third, there's the data that suggests that if we share app friends >>> only, then most apps will only get fewer than 10 friends from each >>> person. If this is the case, then we may want to consider including >>> coefficient ranking for those app friends for free -- or at least >>> the top 5-10 app friends. This doesn't seem like much leakage and >>> could encourage more people to use our tools by differentiation our >>> product further from anything else that's out there.
>>>
>>> Fourth, for products like Ansible and Newsstand, it will be very >>>important to enable people to import their feeds of content from >>>other apps into Facebook. That is, we'd be pulling those people's >>>friends'
>>> data from those apps -- eg your friends' pins on Pinterest to make a >>>Pinterest section for you in Newsstand or include the pin images on >>>your Ansible lock/home. Since this is going to be an important >>>upcoming push, we need to consider whether it's still the right >>>thing to remove our own stream.get API if we're requiring full >>>reciprocity. I still want to remove it, but if the spirit is full >>>reciprocity, it may just be difficult to refuse access to the app >>>that are pushing streams into us.
>>> The good news is that those services aren't the ones we're typically >>>worried about, so we'd still get to prevent almost all troublesome >>>apps from having it. The bad news is this would prevent us from >>>really deprecating this. I haven't thought through this fully and >>>need to think about it some more.
>>>
>>> Fifth, not charging still means people will overuse and abuse our >>>APIs and waste money for us, so I still think we should implement >>>some kind of program where you have to pay if you use too many of >>>our resources.
>>> That said, the goal of this won't be to charge for actual usage so >>>we can build a less precise system of for monitoring than the full >>>accounting systems we would have had to have built for the other >>>system we discussed. What I'm assuming we'll do here is have a few >>>basic thresholds of API usage and once you pass a threshold you >>>either need to pay us some fixed amount to get to the next threshold >>>or you get rate limited at the lower threshold. One basic >>>implementation of this could be to have a few different fees for >>>developers, with basic starting at >>> $100 and then having levels at $10k, $1m, $10m, etc. This should be >>>relatively simple, achieve the goal of controlling costs and make us >>>some money if we want.
>>>
>>> Finally, I want to discuss the premium read services for a bit.
>>>
>>> One of the big ideas I took away from our discussions was Ed Baker's >>>framing that every business wants growth, engagement and monetization.
>>>I >>> like this framing because it explains what the read side of platform >>>is

>>> -- it increases engagement, or more specifically, it takes a user >>>and turns them into a more engaged user through adding real identity >>>and social connections to them. This is real value and it's >>>different from anything else we do. We have ads and some organic >>>distribution for driving growth, the read side of platform for >>>driving engagement and the ad network and payments for driving >>>monetization. We'll offer the full stack of services.

>>> How our premium read services add value is pretty clear -- through >>> simply eliminating friction. Our free services let you get basic >>> info, app friends and let you pay to get access to a dialog to >>> invite more friends. Developers can always get these critical flows >>> to perform better if they have more of the data and more control >>> though. Through instant personalization, they can encourage a person >>> to sign in more effectively and will therefore convert more >>> unregistered users to ones with real identity and friends. Through >>> coefficient and full friends list, they can upsell a person to >>> invite their friends much more effectively throughout their app as >>> well. I'd estimate that these two things alone would increase >>> conversion by ~20-30% for developers. That means they should be >>> willing to pay us roughly 20-30% of the value of each user who signs >>> up. That's a big deal because engagement is very valuable.

>>> I have a specific proposal for how to get started with this and it's >>>that we should work with mobile games. The feedback we're getting >>>from almost every other type of developer is they don't know how to >>>value our services or really much of their engagement at all. But >>>game developers generally track this and have a better sense. They >>>would certainly be willing to try it out in new games and they'd be >>>able to figure out how well it worked. Once it works for most game >>>developers, then we can start letting other developers in as well.

>>> Working with game developers has a few other nice properties. It >>>means doing something nice for our game developers first and making >>>them feel valued. It's fairly natural to offer IP on mobile since we >>>already offer it to them on canvas. This could also be an important >>>part of helping us transition our canvas business onto mobile if it >>>effectively lets us take a 20-30% cut of the value of FB-connected >>>users.

>>> On pricing, there are a couple of ways I could see this working.
>>>First, we could charge based on the value our ads auction computes >>>for each user. I'm still fairly confident that's the most efficient >>>way to charge if we can't just take a straight rev share. That said, >>>the second choice, since this is just games, is to actually figure >>>out how to just take a straight revenue share. This might be >>>possible in conjunction with some sort of publisher model for games >>>that I know the team is already thinking about.

>>> This all said, while I'd love to build this premium engagement model >>> as quickly as possible, there's definitely more low hanging fruit on >>> the growth/distribution side that almost all developers will be able >>> to use if we build out correctly. So we should probably prioritize >>> that before premium engagement.

>>>
>>> We also need to first prioritize all the tools required to make >>>these policies work, including making it so developers can actually >>>share everything social in their apps back to Facebook if we're >>>requiring them to offer that option, the premium invite channel that >>>will replace access to non-app friends, etc.
>>>
>>> Overall, I feel good about this direction. The purpose of platform >>>is to tie the universe of all the social apps together so we can >>>enable a lot more sharing and still remain the central social hub. I >>>think this finds the right balance between ubiquity, reciprocity and >>>profit.
>>>
>>> Again, this isn't final but I wanted to let you all know where I'm

Amir Naor:

>Hey guys, Sean mentioned we made a change yesterday to show login v4 on canvas games when they point to graph 2.0. I was able to confirm this is indeed the case. what's the context for this change?

Amir Naor:

>I'm pretty sure we were all aligned that canvas will remain on gdp 2.5 until EOY

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>It's optional

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>Existing games are free to mix versions, but new games should try to work with v2

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>+Niket, this is news to me

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>Sean - so devs can opt into the new login by using the v2.0 OAuth dialog?

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>Niket took part in deciding this

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>correct

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>that sounds reasonable, so long as nothing is forced

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>only new games are forced

Amir Naor:

>when we say "try" how can they opt out?

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>Oh I see...

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>if old games choose no version, or v1.0, then they see gdpv2.5

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>new games have no option, they get gdpv4

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>Hmm, OK, if Niket & Vishu have vetted this we can collect metrics and see how it works out

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>we all want games to move to v4 too, but haven't been able to force old games. But new games should find ways to work equally well on gdpv4, paving the way for old apps to also migrate

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>yeah, I agree with that statement

Amir Naor:

>This is not what we were planning for, not what we communicated to partners we talked to. Who was in the loop for this decision?

Niket Biswas:

>yeah this is what we decided a while back

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>but I want to make sure we are sensitive to conversion for new games as well, in terms of growth and TPV - which I have no doubt Niket is on top of

Amir Naor:

>s/not/or

Niket Biswas:

>a 1 year deprecation plan was part of the communication plan

Niket Biswas:

>that's what this is

Niket Biswas:

>am i missing something?

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>I think the disconnect here is new games, as in an App ID that was created post f8

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>they get GDP v4 by default and cannot opt out

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>no 1 year anything

Niket Biswas:

>yeah - might have had a disconnect there, though that is what the login folks decided on, and it seems reasonable as they'll just be new apps. for partners we can make an exception (internal tool does this for test apps already)

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>We focus first and foremost on moving the ecosystem forward, and onto a consistent platform. I'm sure that we'll be able to make exceptions if really needed, but we need to start somewhere.

Amir Naor:

>I disagree on having a different rules for different developers - this should be consistent until we are confident on the impact of v4 on the games ecosystem

Amir Naor:

>and tbh this is what we discussed a lot when we agreed on this behavior

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>Amir, the inconsistency is that we hold developers to different standards - it's pretty amazing that no-one has called us out on this already. We let games get away with things we publicly document we don't allow regular apps to do.

Edward O'Neil:

>Wait - this wasn't the plan we agreed upon with everyone, including partnerships, Dan, Mike, Deb, etc.

>

>Plan:

>1/ Canvas remains on GDP v2.5, including existing + new apps

>2/ we test the impact of Login v4 on Canvas apps + games

>3/ using data from #2 we assess when it makes sense to disrupt partners [and the FB business] and push them to move from 2.5 => 4

>

>Can we revert to the above plan and discuss before making any public changes?

Edward O'Neil:

>This is not different rules for different developers - it's different timeframes for different developers.

>Everyone [including Dan / Deb] agree that we are going to move Canvas to v4.

>

>Given the disruption of this change, we want to make it informed with data and let the data drive /when/ we make the change.

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>I only made the changes I discussed with Jeffrey, which he said Niket was onboard with

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>So to recap, for games created after f8, you want them to still be on v2.5? No-one see the big inconsistency between them having all the changes of platformv2 imposed, but not this one ui change?

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>Or are Games also exempted from being forced into v2?

Edward O'Neil:

>I see the inconsistency, we just decided that it was worth it.

>

>Games are being forced into the underlying model changes [app scoped IDs, friends permissions, etc].

>

>The sensitivity from the games business is around two changes that aren't on Canvas today:

>

>1/ read + write split

>

>2/ permission x-out

Edward O'Neil:

>Niket / Vishu / Constantin: thoughts?

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>+Vishu

Edward O'Neil:

>^^ lol. Good call.

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>That sounds reasonable to me - I wasn't involved in the discussion with Dan/Deb but I understand the sensitivity here.

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>If there's a plan to actually get them over, then I'm fine with making gdpr4 optional only for Games.

>As an aside, what is currently preventing apps from listing as games?

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>This is restricted to canvas only and login review would prevent apps from mis-categorizing to collect reviewable permissions

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>As for the plan to move apps over - I expect we use the next year to collect data for apps that opt-in and optimize the experience

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>What do you mean by restricted to canvas only?

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>We don't currently have any distinction regarding the surface used to request tos

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>you must be a canvas game (category = games, have a canvas implementation and only available in the www oauth dialog)

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>games are prohibited from using FB Login for www that are not on canvas AFAIK

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>right, I seem to remember something about this. Which means that canvas isn't really a topic here, only the games classification

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>given that most (all?) games on canvas are in app center, they are also reviewed

Amir Naor:

>It's not a requirement to be listed on the app center, but most developers want to get more traffic and therefore are getting listed and being reviewed. This is on top of login review as Constantin mentioned.

Amir Naor:

>In general, even before f8 (1.0) canvas games were a special case as their were on 2.5 while the rest were on 3.0

Amir Naor:
>s/their/they

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:
>What exactly are we planning on doing to actually get games to migrate? And won't this meant that in a years time, game developers who just created a game, will have their existing games forced onto a new platform?

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:
>Or are we just planning on keeping a sliding window?

Edward O'Neil:
>See #1-#3 above. We need to test with some partners, collect data, and use data to drive the timing.
>
>There isn't a plan beyond that yet because we don't have data.
>
>Timing could be 1 year or 3 years.

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:
>Can we at least limit this to existing big partners? If not we'll be creating an unnecessary amount of churn, for small developers who cannot even find documentation supporting what they are seeing

Amir Naor:
>I think the plan is to use the next couple of month to test this with a few partners (now that's it out) and see what the impact is before making a decision. Once there's an agreement on the tradeoff we are making (driven by data), we'll probably need a breaking change notice before forcing the v4 dialog on canvas. The change developers will need to do will be around login only as they are already experiencing all the other changes features of 2.0.

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:
>Amir - rhetorical question - but how do you announce a breaking change to something which isn't even documented behavior (actually counter to documented behavior)?

Edward O'Neil:
>Sean: let's do this for all of Canvas. Easier to explain that way.
>
>Amir: let's not consider the mechanics of making the change in this thread.

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:
>I'll try to get a fix in tomorrow

Amir Naor:
>weird i just got some of the messages (out of order)... ./ hate when this happens. Anyway, thanks for addressing this Sean.

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:
>Can you make something available for whomever will be working on actually supporting this from a technical point of view, regarding reasoning, timelines etc, too?

Edward O'Neil:
>Great - thanks, Sean.
>
>Amir: let's consider the follow-up questions around who to test with and opt-in separately.

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>Just so it's clear, I'm not in this to disrupt the Games business (or the money business), but I do think we need someone to keep pushing you guys in that direction.

>We've had games on v2 2 years after v3 was launched (and we knew back then that we wanted to get games off of v2), and we now plan on letting them continue on this for up to 3 more years. Let this be the last time we do this.

Constantin Koumouzelis:

>(y)

Edward O'Neil:

>Strong agree.

Oeyvind Sean Kinsey:

>It's ironic that we're exempting the one category where trust is paramount (money is involved) from taking part in building that trust :)

Amir Naor:

>Eddie, I'll follow up separately on the next steps and questioned that were brought up here.

>

>Sean, totally agree with you that we should aim for a consistent platform. I think we are on the right track getting there.

Vishu Gupta:

Here's the recap of the meeting today:

What is launching

The team will launch on Tuesday (8/7). The launch will be an announcement via a developer blog post of the App Install ad unit and the buy flow for developers. Both of these will be gated to select partners and PMDs. We will also release the iOS SDK with the Neko phone home code. This SDK will be ungated and available to all developers. As before, the phone home and ad exclusion uses will not work until Wilde is released.

The opt out

Nipun wasn't at the meeting so I spoke on behalf of the Ads team on this one. We're having Fisch sync back with Dan to discuss what exactly was agreed to in terms of what gets covered when we move to the iOS opt out. I wanted to make it very clear to the team that we should not commit all our potential use cases to be dependent on this opt out if Apple only ever intends to use it with regard to OBA. Fisch is also going to have a more detailed summary written out for Elliot, who wanted something in writing in case we are ever questioned about the content of the conversation.

We are having a meeting with Brian Boland tomorrow (will forward the meeting invite) to discuss the iOS opt out, as I believe this is the worst of all worlds for Ads to have a cross-app opt out that covers all use cases with no incentive for users to remain opted in.

Neko Blurb for HPM

Neko: The privacy team continued to work with the Project Neko, policy comms, and tech comms teams to refine plans for our launch of an iOS mobile measurement solution, which will be included in our SDK and our release of the new Facebook app, codenamed Wilde, which is scheduled for release in late August. The current plan is a Tuesday (Aug 7) launch approach that eliminates many of the most controversial use scenarios for this data. This will include the use of collected information only for aggregate analytics (such as conversion tracking) and ad exclusion (not showing an ad for an app you already have) and will retain information in identifiable form for only a very short period of time. The team has had a series of conversations with the people at Apple to ensure that they will be supportive of the product once it is announced and to agree on a common user data control when we launch future products based on Neko data. Please contact Erin, Rob, or Aldo with any feedback about the launch.

Highlights

Policy Management:

- Dating Targeting: We revised our policy to allow advertisers to target users who haven't indicated that they are "married" or "in a relationship" (instead of only allowing targeting of "single" users). This targeting capability is only currently available for dating, but the ads product team is working to expand it to other verticals (like political) and make it available via self-serve. This is a big win for the dating vertical specifically, but also supports our efforts to examine "good" revenue opportunities resulting from policy relaxation/changes.
- Cyberbullying: Some specific, difficult bullying cases led us to expand our bullying coverage for content that is objectively bullying. We've added prohibitions of (a) coordinated exclusion (e.g. "let's not sit with James at lunch"), (b) coordinated dislike (e.g. "for everyone who hates Emily") and (c) coordinated name-calling (e.g. "Anthony is cheater") of private individuals even when UO is unable to match the name of the reporting person to the post.
- Charity-Related Payments Policy: The Risk and Legal teams have determined that an overwhelming majority of apps using Facebook Payments to solicit funds are likely fraudulent (based on investigation and the fact that we charge 30% service fees). As a result, we changed our policy to require our permission to use Facebook Payments to solicit, collect, or transfer funds for charitable causes. This should help our Risk and POps team more efficiently enforce against fraudulent apps.
- Project Family: We had a very productive meeting with Mark and the Project Family team this week. Mark has decided to pause on Project Family and reassess in a few months. He was very appreciative of all the work that has gone into the product and briefings to date, and understands the need to make concessions on friending and messaging to address concerns raised by policymakers and the safety groups, but he wants to continue to evaluate the impact on our app ecosystem. We will be working on ways we can continue to help shape the COPPA regs and overall debate on this issue over the next few weeks but, in the meantime, we're taking a breath and won't likely regroup on this until we can make more progress with the FTC and gather more data around the benefits of moving forward. Please let Erin know if you have any questions.

- Neko: The privacy team continued to work with the Project Neko, policy comms, and tech comms teams to refine plans for our launch of an iOS mobile measurement solution, which will be included in our SDK and our release of the new Facebook app, codenamed Wilde, which is scheduled for release in late August. Although things continue to remain in flux, we have settled on a launch approach that eliminates many of the most controversial use scenarios for this data. Instead, we will use collected information only for aggregate analytics (such as conversion tracking) and ad exclusion (not showing an ad for an app you already have) and will retain information in identifiable form for only a very short period of time. In addition, Erin has had a series of positive conversations with Apple's Director of Global Privacy about this rollout, and we are working to ensure that Apple will be supportive of the product once it is announced. An initial draft of policy messaging around this rollout is attached. Please contact Erin and Rob with any feedback.
- Data Collection on Android: In addition to Project Neko, which relates to mobile measurement, several other Facebook teams are working on leveraging data collection from our Android app. First, we'll be collecting users' location data and matching it with cell site IDs. This information will be stored in anonymous form but will allow us to roll out location-aware "feature phone" products in the future. Second, the growth team wants to begin collecting certain limited information about whether users have a non-Google app store enabled and which default applications they are using for certain Facebook functions (camera, messages, etc.) for competitive analysis and product improvement purposes. The privacy team is working with the team to determine the best alternatives for collecting this information while minimizing policy risk. Finally, we are working with the Facebook for Android team to improve controls around device-level data that a third-party bug reporting tool sends us when a user's Android app crashes.
- GroupM: Rob worked with the legal and media solutions teams on negotiation of an agreement with GroupM, which will govern GroupM's ability to collect data about Facebook users when we display ads from GroupM clients. Although the negotiation was somewhat contentious, we expect that it will close with a positive outcome in the coming days.
- Messaging setting changes: Erin, Rob, and Aldo met with the product and legal teams to discuss possible changes to several privacy settings that govern how users can be contacted on Facebook. Many of these changes, which are intended to make it easier to find friends on Facebook and anticipate future changes to make our Messaging product closer to a traditional email/text message tool, could result in fewer choices for users who wish to avoid communicating on Facebook, so the privacy team will be working over the next few weeks to develop an approach that meets our product goals but also gives users choice about their Facebook experiences.
- JEF: McKinsey released a report on the economic value of social technologies, which found that social technologies could produce more than $1 trillion of economic value. Jeff Amlin (data monetization) and Matt consulted with the report's authors several months ago to help them better understand the value associated with social technologies, so it's rewarding to see the work pay off with a favorable report. In addition to the overall value number, the study includes several other useful data points, such as that 74% of nonprofits in the US use social networks to raise funds and "social shopping" could add $940 billion in consumption.

US Congressional Update:

- Senate Cybersecurity: By a vote of 84-11, the Senate agreed to proceed to the Rockefeller/Lieberman/Collins/Feinstein cybersecurity bill. At week's end, a handful of technology companies—mainly those that would benefit offering cybersecurity solutions, like Cisco, Intel, and MSFT -- offered support for proceeding to the bill. Other Internet companies like Yahoo and Google share some of our concerns about current provisions in the bill about the critical infrastructure protection requirements. At this stage, Members from both sides of the aisle are filing relevant amendments, including a Republican wholesale substitute measure. We expect fast and furious negotiations about which amendments will be voted upon. The situation remains fluid, and we'll have a better sense by late on Monday whether the bill can survive partisan differences and actually pass. For now, we continue to keep our powder dry publicly, and work through our trade associations and industry coalitions to flag concerns.
- House Privacy Regulation Amendment: Reps. John Conyers (D-MI) and Hank Johnson (D-GA) offered a privacy amendment on the House Floor that would basically single out and exempt privacy regulations from a Republican sponsored "regulatory relief" bill. The amendment failed 159 – 259, with 2 Republicans voting yes and 25 Democrats voting no. While the bill itself will not ultimately become law, this was a good marker vote on where members may fall on future proposals to legislate on privacy. Rep. Mary Bono-Mack (R-CA) gave a very strong statement on the House floor in opposition to the amendment.

US Policy Visits and Political Activity:

- This week we hosted Reps. Pompeo (R-KS) and Harper (R-MS) in the DC Office. Both are Members of the House Energy & Commerce Committee.
- Joe Lockhart was invited by the House New Democrats Caucus to discuss messaging/positioning for the "fiscal cliff" coming up in the Lame Duck session of Congress after the election. Joe met with fifteen Members for an hour. By all accounts Joe was a hit. The Hill team appreciated Joe taking the time to help further FB relationships!
- Hill team attended fundraisers/events with Speaker Boehner, Kevin McCarthy, Marsha Blackburn, John Barrow, Adam Kinzinger, Aaron Schock and Senators Coons and Baucus.
- We hosted General Martin Dempsey, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, at MPK for a Q&A with employees and a meeting with Sheryl and others. Chairman Dempsey and his wife, both active Facebook users, highlighted for employees the critical role Facebook has come to play in helping service members and their families stay connected, particularly during long deployments. Good opportunity to further strengthen our ties with the military community.
- Elliot hosted newly confirmed FCC Commissioners Ajit Pai and Jessica Rosenworcel at MPK, for get-to-know-each-other discussions focused on mobile issues.
- Elliot, Sarah F, Meenal and Sarah WW met with Ambassador Demetrios Marantis, the Deputy US Trade Representative. We spoke about the challenges of operating in Vietnam and the need to take a consistent, coordinated approach. We also discussed the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP), a trade agreement that is currently being negotiated by eleven Pacific Rim countries. The TPP is intended to be the template for a 21st Century Trade Agreement and the first trade agreement to include an "e-commerce" chapter. The TPP Agreement will cover a number of relevant areas including data, services, investment and IP. There are a number of specific provisions that will be helpful in Vietnam including a provision prohibiting arbitrary restrictions on data flows and another preventing requirements to locate servers in exchange for operating a service. Although Marantis expressed that he was eager to address the concerns of tech companies within the TPP, he demonstrated a limited knowledge of our interests and concerns. When we suggested that legislation regulating privacy, law enforcement or freedom of expression could potentially create a trade barrier or market access issue, he seemed reluctant to consider the concept. We will need to work to familiarize USTR with our issues and concerns but there appears to be value in advancing our interests through the TPP. Sarah WW is going to follow up with USTR.

US State Policy:

- Western Attorneys General: Will Castleberry attended the Conference of Western Attorneys General (CWAG) annual meeting in Anaheim, California. The event was well attended and covered a set of interesting topics including Data Breach, eDiscovery, Cyber-bullying, Consumer Protection and IP Theft, Mobile Privacy and Human Trafficking. In addition to conference events, Will attended events for the Democratic and Republican AGs Associations, and participated on behalf of Facebook in a fundraiser for Idaho General Wasden.
- CA AG Privacy Unit: On Wednesday, Will met with Robert Morgester – the head of California’s eCrime unit to discuss General Harris’ recently announced Office of Privacy Protection. The meeting went well and we were left with several useful assurances about the AG’s intentions--the most important being that they view Facebook as a good actor and they will keep communications with us open (we will not unknowingly be the subject of an investigation).

SF Mayor Roundtable: Susan Gonzales participated in a Roundtable meeting with Labor Secretary Solis and SF Mayor Lee to discuss internships and youth development and job creation. Susan had the opportunity to discuss the FB Academy and the app developer jobs created due to FB.

Facebook Academy: Inaugural Facebook Academy class wrapped up this week, with final Hack Project reviews and a graduation celebration. Each student presented a final Hack project, with impressive results focused on research and solving problems for IT (i.e. how many laptops are distributed throughout the company, how to improve IT services and wait lines). Congrats to all involved for making this a big success!

Argentina: Our office in Argentina is going to be audited by the Argentinian Data Protection Authorities next Friday (August 2). Regina Lima (our LatAm Legal Counsel) is managing the audit process. Debbie has prepared reactive messaging. We expect the audit to be straight forward although there is a potential risk regarding jurisdictional reach - the Argentinian Data Protection law does not recognize the concept of "Data Controller" so the extent to which they will seek to exert their jurisdiction and/or recognize the regulatory competence of the Irish DPC is not clear. The fact that we are being audited by the Argentinian Data Protection Authority less than six months after opening our sales office suggests that the regulators are going to take an aggressive approach and we may need to deepen our policy and communications engagement in Argentina.

Brazil:

- Organ Donation: On Monday LatAm VP Alexandre Hohagen will launch the organ donation tool at a Press Conference with the Brazilian Minister of Health Alexandre Padilha. The Minister is a doctor and since taking office has run a successful organ donation campaign (investing $76 million dollars) which effectively doubled the number of Brazilian donors between 2010 and 2011. The Minister is very influential in the ruling PT party. Given the Minister's enthusiasm for our organ donation initiative we anticipate a successful launch.
- General Internet Framework Bill: We continue to push to advance this important legislation in Brazil. This week we worked with academics and NGOs to develop a letter to send to opponents of the Bill and those wavering under pressure from the Motion Picture Association and Telecommunications companies. This outlined the benefits of the legislation and urged Congress to progress the Bill. The letter was not signed by companies and given the influence of the academics and NGOs in Brazil we expect it will substantially progress our efforts to move this legislation forward.

Bulgaria: Gabi met the team of the privacy officer in Sofia to discuss the proposed EU regulation on data protection. Their interest is focused on right to be forgotten and on the issue of safety for minors vs "tracking" our users for security purposes (as stated by the deputy commissioner.) Bulgaria supports the one stop shopping in principle but has reservations about the effectiveness of the cooperation of DPAs. They appreciated Facebook's proactive approach but were reluctant to provide much in the way of feedback to us. Gabi established contacts with the local safety NGOs and will continue discussion on issues of minors, which seem to be a sensitive topic in Bulgaria.

EMEA Politics and Government: Elizabeth spent a day in Dublin with the Mid-Market Sales team. Ramping up political and government constituents is high on the MMS team's priority list. Elizabeth and a team of four MMS representatives responsible for the politics & government vertical worked on defining the MMS politics narrative slides with case studies and stories that will work with our audience and have set up a working group to share collateral and chart out priorities.

UK: This week we announced the start of the recruitment for our engineering office in London. Working with Iain Mackenzie in PR, Rosa briefed the UK government and the Mayor of London's office on the announcement – both of whom were very excited. Iain also secured a fantastic quote from the Mayor and we're looking forward to planning a major event with policy makers to fully open the office later in the year. Simon and Rosa worked with the relevant government agencies to ensure that we could make this a positive story by successfully resolving some very sensitive issues around government support for inward investment.

EU: The European Internet Foundation (EIF), of which Fb is a member, organized a delegation of MEPs to visit MPK. The main purpose of the trip was to understand why so many Internet companies are based in Silicon Valley and what European policy makers can learn from this in shaping actively innovation and regulatory policies in Europe. The group was led by Pilar del Castillo. The following MEPs attended: Malcolm Harbour, James Elles, Peter Skinner, Edit Herczog, Ivailo Kalfin, Lambert van Nistelrooij, Maria Badia I Cuchet, Sabine Verheyen, Bill Newton Dunn. The group was very impressed by comments from Elliot, Erika, Katherine, Erin, Sarah, Cristian, and we will be following up with each member on the issues they raised. The group said that the FB stop was the most interesting visit of their trip.

Vietnam: We are continuing to work on the 2 Internet decrees (services and content) that are pending in Vietnam. Our understanding is that a final draft of the content decree may have been submitted to the Prime Minister for review, which would mean that we would have no more formal opportunities to comment on it. However, we recently received another draft of the services decree, and worked with AmCHAM to develop comments that will be submitted next week. So as to continue to make our views heard on the content decree, these comments touch on not only the services decree, but the content decree as well. In addition, we are working with the Asia Internet Coalition to try to bolster our views. Finally, AmCham is working with the government to set up a meeting with Internet companies during the second week of August.

India:

- Intermediary rules: Week of extensive outreach. Minister Sibal is holding a closed door meeting on Aug 2 with MPs following up on his parliamentary assurance of reviewing language in the rules which negatively impact freedom of expression and are inconsistent with constitutional guarantees of fundamental rights of free speech. Reached out to target MPs from opposition parties expected to attend this meeting and re-emphasized list of concerns. Also informally met Dr Rai and Sibal to understand their goals and suggested a constructive approach for the meeting. The meeting with MPs will be led by Sibal and we can expect him to try and play a victim role and gain sympathy from the MPs, saying that the US intermediaries "don't comply with local laws". He may also raise concerns with the corporate structures of the India entities of US companies. Ankhi has advised MPs that the matter is sub-judice in various courts of India and they should make that point with the Minister and re-orient the discussion to the substantive issues in the rules. Reps from Industry associations – IAMAI (Internet and Mobile association of India), CII (Confederation of India Industry) and NASSCOM have been invited to this meeting to provide comments at the end. We, along with Google and Y! 's local Policy leads, have worked with them on talking points. We also finished drafting a letter that Arun Jaitley, leader of the Opposition, can use on intermediary rules. Finally, CIS (<http://cis-india.org/>), a leading think tank working on Internet policy and technology policy issues, has been organizing various speech NGOs to agitate against the Intermediary rules. CIS recently published a detailed analysis of the legality of the rules, calling them unconstitutional on various grounds. This was published as an Open whitepaper and sent to MPs, Minister Sibal, Dr Rai and the Prime Minister's Office. CIS will continue to keep up the public opinion pressure and keep organizing the activists.

- Privacy Law: Ankhi engaged with members of the Govt. appointed drafting Committee. The Committee is headed by Retd. Justice AP Shah. The Committee is finalizing its report which will be opened up for public comments by end August – early Sept. The proposed law contemplates setting up a DPA in India; the committee members were not very forthcoming about the structure and the powers of the DPA. With respect to the legislative process, the Govt. wants to bring a draft bill to Parliament in the Winter session of Parliament and start the discussion and voting process. This will be a big focus of ours during 2H 2012 now that the timetable moved up.
- India's President Pranab Mukherjee joins Facebook: Very exciting. Congrats to Ankhi and team. This is a big deal as people like Minister Sibal will take notice of the President joining Facebook. India's first citizen joined Facebook 24 hours after his swearing-in ceremony. Mukherjee has five decades in public life having always held the no.2 position starting from Indira Gandhi's cabinet to the current Govt. In our Public value campaign in India, we have prioritized the key actors. The President's office is a constitutional office, the highest position in the country, and the President does not belong to any political party as the guardian of the constitution. Mukherjee resigned from the Congress party when he ran for President's office. The President is 77 years of age and not very familiar with new media so there were some natural challenges in convincing him. In the end, we succeeded and his team drove PR around his joining FB. Almost all newspapers reported it. We are now discussing page engagement with his team and are lining up trainings for this. Sample press coverage of his joining FB can be seen here - <http://www.hindustantimes.com/India-news/NewDelhi/President-Pranab-logs-on-to-Facebook/Article1-900376.aspx>

Australia/New Zealand:

- Gambling/gaming: Mia secured industry sign-off (including with Microsoft and the local game industry association) on alternate language for a Recommendation currently proposed by the Australian Government that would require platforms such as Facebook to closely monitor the simulated payout ratios in casino style fun games and ensure that these games do not inappropriately target younger users. Mia also met with the relevant policymakers to discuss our concerns about the current wording of the Recommendation and we are now awaiting feedback from the Government on the proposed alternate language. We are also getting ready to pre-brief relevant policy makers about the upcoming UK gambling launch in a way that does not adversely impact the progress we have made locally on the casino games issue to date.
- FB political engagement: Strong interest from all Australian political parties in using FB for campaigning. This week, Mia met with two advisers for the conservative opposition party to confirm contents of two workshops we will hold in August -- one with the actual political representatives and the other will be a more detailed presentation with staffers. She also met with the Prime Minister's Chief of Staff and other key ministerial advisers from the governing Labor party about digital campaigning. Similar conversations are happening with the key communications adviser for the Greens party, which holds the balance of power in the Senate.
- Ambassador Bleich: Elliot and Sarah WW met with the US Ambassador to Australia. We raised the issue of the Australian Government trying to extend their jurisdiction and directly regulate Facebook through new privacy regulation. The Ambassador said that this was another example of the Australian Government failing to understand the needs of technology companies and the importance of innovation. He has been actively working on cloud issues and established relationships with key players in both the bureaucracy and political arenas. The Ambassador offered to raise concerns with his contacts regarding the proposed legislation.

People

- Elliot, Erin and Sarah presented at the Legal Offsite. Heard really great things about their presentations. They provided an overview of the structure of the policy/comms team, what the areas of interest and focus are, and how legal can help/how we can work together. Many of the Legal team are new and did not have an understanding of what we do or how we can work together. We answered a broad range of questions including privacy, law enforcement and jurisdiction issues. The message that they should not be constrained by 'how things are' but instead should be driven by 'how we want them to be' provoked a great deal of comment.
- Ankhi: Great work on getting yet another key policymaker onto Facebook.

Me

- On Saturday, I gave a speech at the Chautauqua Institution Hall of Philosophy which was a very cool venue. (Even my kids were impressed by the venue.) Average age in the audience was -- 65! I felt good that when it started to rain, the people seated in the uncovered, outdoor sections remained. I felt even better that I managed to find the right baseline messaging and that so many people expressed how, as a result of the talk, they were less skeptical and more interested in using Facebook "to help change the world." Special thanks to Matt for all his help with this speech. We had a lot of good laughs preparing this one.

Android Permissions. Matt has been working with the privacy PM, PMM, and Legal to understand privacy risks associated with several Android permissions that will go out in the next release, including permissions associated with reading call logs and SMS. Simultaneously, we're working to mitigate policy risks associated with a proposed help center FAQ designed to list and provide an example of each permission.

Follow Redesign. Matt is working with the privacy PM, PMM, and Legal to finalize help center and user ed content for the Follow redesign, which is slated to roll out to 10% on 11/20.

Only Me Stickiness. Matt is providing policy feedback on a Mark Z. request that Product explore the possibility of making the Only Me audience setting unsticky. The goal of this change would be to help users avoid inadvertently posting to the Only Me audience. We are encouraging Product to explore other alternatives, such as more aggressive user education or removing stickiness for all audience settings.

Privacy Shortcuts Icon (Mobile). In response to user confusion regarding the new padlock button for privacy shortcuts added next to user names in Android (users think their account is being locked down), Product has proposed removing the shortcut icon entirely. Matt is working with PR, Legal, and others to assess the risks associated with removal and explore any potential alternatives, such as redesigning the button.

Public Posting UFI Test. Matt is working with Product and others to finalize the details surrounding a planned test of the new UFI and filters for public comments, including the scope and location of the test.

Survey Issues. Yul Kwon and Mike Nowak are interested in exploring the legal and policy implications of matching privacy survey results to user behavior to assess the extent to which user intent and user behavior are aligned. We have advised that we should be prepared to take some action to remedy user confusion revealed in the survey, ideally for the entire user population but at least for the user in our sample for which we have actual notice of confusion. Mike seems reluctant to commit to concrete action in either scenario in the short term, although he has expressed that he goal ultimately is to improve user comprehension.

Hope everyone has a great weekend!

Instagram Directed Sharing. Nicky provided an update this week during our Weekly Privacy Download on directed sharing - now called 'Instagram Directs', which will launch on 12/9. As you know, this product allows people to send picture messages to a few individuals (max of 15). Because messaging is riskier from a material safety perspective, the core team is working on the following:

- 1) Ensuring that we are staffed from a UO perspective to support additional reports of directed shares, and are in a good place to escalate potentially sensitive reports to our e-crimes team;
 - 2) Using our backend tools to help identify anomalous and potentially predatory behavior (for instance, men sending Instagram Directs only to women our young boys);
 - 3) Creating extra education in-product, in Help Center, and via partners like the Safety Advisory Board to demonstrate a commitment to educating teens and others. While in the longer term, we plan to have 'flyouts' to educate those identified as teens, in the shorter term we are baking education into the NUXes when the product launches.
- We also plan to brief the Safety Advisory Board early next week (likely Tuesday).

Research

Maritza attended a member meeting for MIT CSAIL's Big Data initiative. Sameet Agarwal, Pinkesh Patel, and Ryan Mack also attended. Between the four of us, we had great coverage on any topic someone might want to talk about related to big data: infrastructure, data science, and privacy. I heard from more than one attendee that they were excited to see our strong presence at the event.

Most of the presenters were MIT faculty and students presenting projects from the past year. There was a strong focus on results: lots of interesting demos and experimental results. The keynote speaker was Deb Roy, MIT professor and chief media officer at Twitter. He gave an excellent talk on the power of social media to augment the TV watching experience. His keynote isn't available yet, but here's a similar talk he gave in March 2013. He focused on Twitter data but it applies to Facebook as well. It's worth watching for the visualizations alone.
<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=GiAVKr3nvvE>

I was most interested in the sessions on big data applications, and privacy and security (<http://bigdata.csail.mit.edu/annual2013>). The speakers in the applications session spoke about applying data to public health problems, identifying genetic diseases, and improving education using MOOC data. It's great to hear positive applications of data that motivate solving the privacy questions. Each of the speakers noted that their research has been impeded by unsolved privacy questions like how do you obtain informed consent, and how do you design a system with transparency in mind. In the privacy session, Danny spoke about designing for trust when users might fear surveillance. He proposed that accountability must be embedded in the system design so that questions about data provenance, use, and transfer can easily be answered. Here's a neat demo on visualizing public Tweets. <http://mapd.csail.mit.edu/>

Maritza also attended the first meeting of the Big Data privacy working group. The group plans to approach the problem using specific case studies. The tentative plan is to focus on the MOOC data set first, and walk through the process of applying the available technical solutions and policy guidelines to define an arrangement that would allow the data to be shared with researchers. As a subtask of this work, the group will decide on a set of assertions that describe a successful data sharing program.

Maritza met with Alan Davidson to discuss the proposed MIT policy initiative.

Maritza, Rob, and Erin continued to iterate on a proposal for a research program centered on the privacy paradox.

Maritza continued to work with Cam and Bob Kraut on a proposal for a data donation program with Wolfram Alpha.

Log In Anonymously. Rob continued work with the Open Graph team on Log In Anonymously (name subject to change), a product that will let people use their Facebook accounts (or, potentially, another Facebook-mediated account) to log into apps without the need to provide personal information or consent to sharing of data.

App post suggestions. To address concerns about apps posting "implicit" user actions back to Facebook timelines, the Open Graph team is working on a feature that will, on an opt-in basis, enable apps to send "suggested posts" describing your activity to a "locker" within Facebook. If enabled, users will be able to see potential actions they could post to their timeline and then tap on a suggestion to open up a pre-filled composer. Rob is working with the team on technical implementation details to address privacy concerns.

Stable identifiers. The privacy team is working to evaluate Google's recent move to restrict use of device identifiers on Android and limit companies' ability to combine them with personal identifiers — a key use case for Facebook and Atlas — potentially without subjecting Google itself to the same restriction. We're working to develop options for policy initiatives that can support product and partnership initiatives to compete effectively and address Google's approach.

Do Not Track. Rob attended a meeting of the Digital Advertising Alliance, which is aiming to finalize a Do Not Track standard as soon as December or January. We're pressing DAA to address Facebook-specific uses in its standard to ensure that we can continue to operate key aspects of our service under its proposed DNT approach.

India Privacy Legislation. Erin, Ankhi, Sarah, Emily and Rob will submit a draft of comments to the Centre for Internet and Society this week. This is an Indian NGO that is preparing a so-called "consensus" draft of privacy legislation, which will precede introduction of privacy legislation sponsored by the Indian government.

Brazil. The Internet Framework bill was amended to include some problematic new language on jurisdiction, personal data and penalties. Emily, Rob, and Katherine are developing proposed language to address issues with these new proposals.

International Privacy Policy Tracking Chart. Emily is finalizing a tracking chart to be debuted at the next Weekly Privacy Download. The chart will help us monitor developments in privacy regulations globally, focusing on high priority jurisdictions and highlighting problematic issues and any deadlines for intervention. Ultimately the chart's content can be used to create one-pagers.

Privacy group engagement. The privacy team worked this week with a number of privacy and trade groups, including the Future of Privacy Forum, Center for Democracy and Technology, the IAB and DMA. Of particular note this week, Emily is evaluating the possibility of joining the US Council on International Business (USCIB) and Maritza and Rob are working with the Direct Marketing Association to provide guidance on its new academic research initiative, which we are encouraging them to focus on the benefits of data to individuals and the economy and how we can better understand the "privacy paradox" -- the disconnect between what people say about privacy and what they actually believe.

Privacy Roundtable. Rob, Marcy, and Emily are working with the privacy PM and open graph teams on an event tentatively scheduled for MPK in January, where we'll bring in a group of privacy influencers to learn more about Facebook, our privacy and product design process, and to build relationships with privacy stakeholders within the company.

f8 Event and Facebook Platform FAQ

What is f8?

f8 was an event held at the San Francisco Design Center on May 24, 2007, during which Mark Zuckerberg unveiled the next evolution of Facebook Platform. The event included an eight-hour "hackathon," where both Facebook engineers and outside developers collaborated on building new applications on the new Facebook Platform.

What is a "hackathon"?

A hackathon is an all-night coding event during which Facebook engineers work on any project that interests them. Facebook uses the word "hackathon" to refer to a gathering of engineers, who possess technical expertise and collaborate on innovative projects. Facebook has a tradition of holding frequent developer hackathons, which have spawned some of the most popular features and applications on the site.

What is Facebook Platform?

Facebook Platform is a development system that enables companies and developers to build applications for the Facebook website, where all of Facebook's 24 million active users can interact with them. Facebook Platform offers deep integration into the Facebook website, distribution through the social graph and an opportunity to build a business.

What is the social graph?

The social graph is at the core of Facebook. It is the network of connections and relationships between people on Facebook and enables the efficient spreading and filtering of information. Just as people share information with their friends and the people around them in the real world, these connections are reflected online in the Facebook social graph.

What is a Facebook application?

A Facebook application uses Facebook Platform to access information from the social graph, offering users an experience that's relevant to them. Facebook applications can plug into the Facebook website in a number of ways: applications can be embedded on users' profile pages, reside on their own separate pages (called "canvas" pages), or live through desktop applications using data from the Facebook social graph.

What's new in Facebook Platform?

We've been adding functionality since Facebook Platform first shipped in beta in August 2006. With the latest evolution of Facebook Platform however, third-party developers can now create applications on the Facebook site with the same level of integration as applications built by internal Facebook developers. Now developers everywhere have the ability to create Facebook applications that deeply integrate into the Facebook site, as well as the potential for mass distribution through the social graph and new business opportunities.

Why did Facebook launch Facebook Platform?

Our engineers have created great applications for Facebook, but we recognized that third-party developers can help us make Facebook an even more powerful social utility. Facebook Platform gives developers everywhere the tools to create applications that we just wouldn't have the resources to build in-house, and those applications make Facebook an even better way for our users to exchange information. Developers also benefit from Facebook Platform as it gives them the potential to broadly distribute their applications and even build new business opportunities.

What kinds of applications can be built on Facebook Platform?

The kinds of applications developers can build on Facebook Platform are limited only by their imaginations. Because applications are based on the Facebook social graph they can be more relevant to users, keeping people in touch with what and whom they care about. We've already seen a variety of applications built by our developer partners, including those for sharing media files, book reviews, slideshows and more. Some of the possibilities of Facebook applications are illustrated in the Facebook Platform Application Directory, available at <http://www.facebook.com/apps>.

Are there any restrictions on what developers can build?

Developers are encouraged to exercise their creativity when building applications. Of course, all applications are subject to the Terms of Service that every developer agrees to, which include basic requirements such as not storing any sensitive user information, not creating any offensive or illegal applications, and not building anything that phishes or spams users. And users will always have the power to report any applications that compromise Facebook's trusted environment, keeping our users' information safe.

What are the benefits of Facebook Platform for users?

With Facebook Platform, users gain the ability to define their experience on Facebook by choosing applications that are useful and relevant to them. Now that they have access to a virtually limitless set of applications from outside developers, users have an unprecedented amount of choice. They can share information and communicate with their trusted connections in ways that would never have been possible before Facebook opened its platform.

How do users add applications to and remove applications from their account?

If a user sees an application she likes on a friend's profile, she can add it to her account by clicking the "Add" link on the application's profile box. She can also add new applications by navigating to the application's specific page in the Facebook Platform Application Directory and clicking "Add Application" in the top-right corner. To remove an application, she first clicks "Applications" on the left navigation bar. From there, she can "Remove" any of the applications in her account, whether they are built by a developer partner or by Facebook.

What are the privacy controls for Facebook Platform, and what kind of user information can be shared?

On Facebook, users are always in control of their information and can choose how much of their information is made available to specific applications. With Facebook Platform, we're offering additional privacy controls and requiring that third parties treat user information with the same respect we do—and our users have come to expect. Users can also choose to completely opt out of making their data available through Facebook Platform. Applications can never violate users' basic privacy settings and are meant to provide users with a better opportunity to share their information with their friends and networks.

What do third-party applications do with user information?

Applications built by third parties are required to respect Facebook users' privacy preferences. Third-party applications allow users and their friends to share information in new ways, without affecting the security and privacy that they've always enjoyed on Facebook.

How many applications are there for Facebook Platform?

At f8, we are launching with over 85 applications from more than 65 developer partners, and that's only the beginning. We're encouraging interested developers everywhere to create Facebook applications. We have no limits on the number of applications that can be created.

What differentiates Facebook applications from widgets on other sites?

Facebook applications are deeply integrated into the site and take advantage of the network of real connections through which users share information and communicate—what we call the "social graph." Widgets are typically single-purpose Flash add-ons to a web page (i.e., displaying a single video) that are not fully integrated into a site nor are aware of the social context among users.

How will Facebook maintain its minimalist style if users can add and move applications around on their profile?

We're giving our users the choice to add applications and control their placement in their profiles, but we're not changing the essential layout and familiar style of the Facebook site. Facebook applications are focused on providing new ways to spread information on Facebook, not about redesigning the way a profile looks. For example, users will not be able to change the site background, add music that plays when their profiles load, or insert animation into their profiles. Individual applications may play media, music or animations but only when a visitor to that profile interacts with them.

How will Facebook deal with applications that compete with one another or even compete with Facebook-built applications?

We welcome developers with competing applications, including developers whose applications might compete with Facebook-built applications. Many applications are likely to offer similar features. We've designed Facebook Platform so that applications from third-party developers are on a level playing field with applications built by Facebook. Ultimately, our users will decide which applications they find most useful, and it is these applications that will become the most popular.

How will Facebook monetize Facebook Platform?

All the great applications built by our developer partners provide a service to our users and strengthen the social graph. The result is even more engaged Facebook users creating more advertising opportunities.

Can Facebook applications include ads?

We want to enable developers to build a business on their Facebook applications, so we're giving developers the freedom to monetize their applications as they like. Developers can include advertising on their applications' canvas pages, though no advertising will be allowed within the application boxes that appear within user profiles.

Are you going to share revenue with developers?

While revenue sharing is not available at launch, we are looking into ways to share advertising revenue with developers. This version of Facebook Platform already lets developers monetize their applications as they like, whether they choose to offer it for free or build a business on their application.

What are the key technical elements of Facebook Platform?

Facebook Platform offers several technologies that help developers use data from the social graph. In addition to the Facebook API, this recently launched version of Facebook Platform introduces Facebook Markup Language (FBML), which enables developers to build applications that deeply integrate into the Facebook site. Facebook Platform also includes Facebook Query Language (FQL), which lets developers use a SQL-style interface to query the data they can access through the API.

For more details on the technology behind Facebook Platform, check out the Facebook Developer site at <http://developers.facebook.com>.

Edward O'Neil:

>When you have time - would be great to talk about game use cases.

Ilya Sukhar:

>why games?

Edward O'Neil:

>Oh - just thought you'd mostly been talking to games yesterday, but interested in anything you've heard.

Ilya Sukhar:

>Nothing novel - just talked a lot about Platform with devs.

Edward O'Neil:

>Ok - which change(s) do you perceive as most fuck-ing to developers? :)

Ilya Sukhar:

>third party ids because they are impossible to explain to a dev why were doing it

Edward O'Neil:

>Because they need to change their DBs? Or because it may be harder to do X-app promotion?

Ilya Sukhar:

>because they need to do anything

Ilya Sukhar:

>but yes cross app promotion is obviously huge in games

Ilya Sukhar:

>as is coherent ltv comparisons etc

Ilya Sukhar:

>they will just collect emails and dedup

Edward O'Neil:

>Makes sense - a couple of things:

>

>1/ sounds like the concern is generally wrt change.

>2/ outside of change, any concerns wrt non-app friends and removing friend_* permissions?

>3/ outside of change, would scoping UIDs to the vendor rather than an individual app help?

Ilya Sukhar:

>I think we should just rewind and figure out if we're solving a problem that matters. What real graph protection do we get? Not much.

Edward O'Neil:

>Yeah, this is why I was trying to backup to first-principles w/ Javi... :)

Ilya Sukhar:

>My concern is that there is no fundamental guiding motivation here and I'm still not sure who is driving it. It's not Javi from what I can tell.

Edward O'Neil:

>In my mind, the motivation is making it more difficult to build hi-fidelity profiles of users for the purpose of advertising.

Ilya Sukhar:

>well that's the first time I've heard said motivation

Edward O'Neil:

>Growth (Javi) has two technical concerns:

>

>1/ don't let apps grow w/o FB

>2/ make it difficult to re-assemble disparate graphs, which I believe is related to two concerns:

>

>2.1/ creating off-FB advertising profiles

>2.2/ graph assembly by apps that pose a strategic threat - e.g. messaging apps

>

>Sam's concern is mostly leaking data (profile data + graph connections) to partners without getting something in return - e.g. reciprocal data or an ownership stake.

>

>The point of talking to Javi this week wasn't to make a plan but to understand the advertising and growth concerns, especially wrt a single partner growing their apps.

Edward O'Neil:

>[I may have a wrong perspective(s) here, so please disagree if so.]

Ilya Sukhar:

>that all makes sense and lines up for me except 2.1 but that makes sense too

Ilya Sukhar:

>What doesn't make sense is how third party ids solve all these problems

Ilya Sukhar:

>Sam prefers we just not have an open platform

Ilya Sukhar:

>right

Ilya Sukhar:

>right

Ilya Sukhar:

>I see how friend perms help with some

Edward O'Neil:

>My interpretation of Sam's preferred platform models (in order):

>1/ a closed platform with per-app contracts

>2/ an open platform where apps only get app-friends and optionally a contract that govern use of non-app friends or other info

>

>Ex: Tinder signs a contract to access non-app friends in exchange for a stake, for data, etc

>

>3/ app friends + non-app friends w/ 3rd party IDs [proposed model]. He's not thrilled with this but said it's better than where we are today and isn't the biggest strategic issue we need to solve

>4/ all friends w/ real IDs

>[all of #1 - #3 remove friend_* permissions]

>

>On friend_*: yeah, they're super powerful since 1 TOS can net an app detailed info about 400+ people.

Ilya Sukhar:

>I prefer #2 to #3. It's at least clear.

Edward O'Neil:

>Frankly, I agree with you.

Ilya Sukhar:

>Then fight for it!

Ilya Sukhar:

>Javi prefers #2 to #3.

Edward O'Neil:

>We backed away from the app-friends only model because of games and want to find a way to support:

>

>For games:

>1/ custom MFS

>2/ cross-app promotion

>For non-games:

>3/ tagging

>

>Feel like I'm still gathering data on all 3 and can't make a sufficiently argued case to:

>1/ carve out games as a special case, especially since giving games #1 + #2 still triggers the growth concerns

>2/ make tagging approval-only. Data analyst will hopefully pull that data for me today.

Edward O'Neil:

>So, feel like we will end up fighting for it but want to have munitions before really having the argument. :)

>
>Note: this would break apps like Tinder w/o a process for them to sign a contract.

>
>Vlad also thinks it is too disruptive for the developer community and wants to slowly wean the ecosystem off of non-app friends.

Ilya Sukhar:
>Well perhaps the whole endeavor is flawed.

Ilya Sukhar:
>Javi is perfectly happy with an enforcement-only plan.

Ilya Sukhar:
>The details are obviously not there yet but it's an option.

Edward O'Neil:
>..really?!? With real UIDs?

Ilya Sukhar:
>For what it's worth, Sean Ryan is under the impression that games will just get an exception to any ps12n thing in the end so he's not too worried about it.

Edward O'Neil:
>Heh - yeah, that's very typical of how FB thinks about this and part of why our product legacy includes everything we've ever shipped...
>
>Keeping games opt-ed out of Login v3 is a great example of that.

Ilya Sukhar:
>So - then who cares about Games hangups with plan #2?

Edward O'Neil:
>I do because George, Namita, and Sean have made good arguments that it's important to the games ecosystem.

Ilya Sukhar:
>What's important?

Ilya Sukhar:
>Not to mess things up?

Ilya Sukhar:
>That's my point. They'll just push for an exception to all of it, in the end.

Edward O'Neil:
>Yeah - continuity for the sake of:
>
>1/ revenue
>2/ game developers' perception of Platform
>
>I'm not sure we're ready to shift the Games business from it's current model of using MFS / invites / X-app promotion for growth wholesale to one based on app install / re-engagement ads.
>

>The latter are mobile products that would leave the billion dollar Canvas business out in the cold.
>
>And they care a lot about preserving that business.
>
>Seems like this is what makes the Supercell deal interesting - that success happened on mobile.

Ilya Sukhar:

>Yeah, I understand all this.

Edward O'Neil:

>Cool - glad we're on the same page. ;)

Ilya Sukhar:

>My point is - why aren't we just splitting the two when we considering anything ps12n related.

Ilya Sukhar:

>Why are we worried that #2 doesn't work for Games if we can just carve out Games in general?

Edward O'Neil:

>Yeah, that's the $64K question.

Edward O'Neil:

>It doesn't solve for Doug's "competitive future" category since there will be another Zynga.

Ilya Sukhar:

>How does the proposal solve for it?

Edward O'Neil:

>It doesn't - because we're basically giving Games the keys to the kingdom to support MFS and X-app promotion.

Edward O'Neil:

>[in either model #2 or #3]

Ilya Sukhar:

>:)

Edward O'Neil:

>Adding more detail to #2:

>

>1/ For Games:

>= apps get app friends

>= apps get list of people to Invite

>= if approved for tagging, apps get list of non-app friends to tag

>

>2/ For non-Games:

>= apps get app friends

>= if approved for tagging, apps get list of people to tag

>

>All apps from a vendor get a stable UID but those UIDs are different across vendors.

>Issues:

>1/ would need a way to approve an app to access non-app friends [ex: Tinder]

>Sound right?

Ilya Sukhar:

>Unclear that we really need vendor specific ids but, yeah, sounds about right.

Edward O'Neil:

>Vendor-specific IDs go to the ads profile issue, but agree.

Ilya Sukhar:

>Gotta take off - talk to you later. I should be more available starting tomorrow because my London schedule is much less packed.

Edward O'Neil:

>Sounds good - ttyl.

Subject: Re: Thoughts on a Messenger Platform

- Mark
+ Vishu, George

Based on our conversation earlier today, I wanted to summarize a few of my thoughts.

I think the overarching goal here should be to change the trajectory for Messenger. If Messenger doesn't become the defacto communication solution for 1:1 and small groups, then it really doesn't matter what platform is built on top of it. So the goal of whatever platform things we do over the next year should be to change the trajectory for Messenger. (If something increases sends by 2% that doesn't matter, if we think it will doubles sends, it's worth working on)

Within that, the next question is, how can a platform of some sort help out there. The thing that comes to mind for me is it can scale things in a way a team our size cant do internally. I'm not sure yet whether that is valuable or not, but it's something that I think is worth thinking about applying to everything in Messenger and seeing whether that could be high impact. If we scale that thing in some way, does that make it a differentiator or something that can materially change our trajectory. (I'm interested in hearing other high level things it could do to beyond scaling stuff, because I haven't thought much about platform).

--- Brief aside about the direction of messaging ---

I think it's important we scale the product Messenger will become, not what Messenger is right now. 6 Months ago, FB Messaging was "1:1 text chat while browsing FB". With 3.0 our focus was to change this to "1:1 text chat anytime, mobile-to-mobile". Now our focus is to transition to "(1:1 and small group) communication (with different content types: text and photo and voice and stickers ...) anytime mobile-to-mobile". We want to become the defacto every day communication platform, something that makes SMS look like smoke signals.

In Messenger there are audiences. Right now the main audiences that users interact with is a 1:1 convo with their friend. We plan on building out a spaces (groups) product where groups are an as important audience as people, and in the future an audience will be either a person or a small group.

Right now, you choose an audience and then you communicate with them, this is audience-first sharing. You do this by sharing content that can be different content types. Right now, text is the main content type we focus on, but we support others (photos, stickers, voice clips). In the future we plan on making it even easier to share these other types of content so that often times it's less friction to send a photo of you with your friend than it is to type 'I'm with raymond'. For some content types there are different pieces of content you can share within them. For example, the stickers content type has lots of different pieces of content inside of it. This would apply to other things like memes and links that aren't really created when you share them but are more picked when you share them.

In addition to the current model of audience-first sharing we want to enable content-first sharing directly in the app. This is when you have a piece of content and then blast it to audiences. For example, I could send a funny link to Mike, Luke, and my group that is my brothers. This would generate 3 copies of that content and in turn three conversations around that content. This would also be something I want do if I want to reshare a link that was sent to me.

To add visuals to these concepts:

- Here is a potential new version of the composer after you've selected an audience that makes it easy to send different content types: <https://facebook.box.com/s/uva38ikio2aaaekz3iu3>
- Here is a potential version of content-first sharing from within the app: <https://facebook.box.com/s/m92bzimvzka86fxgy8d2>

--- Now Back to Scaling Things ---

So given all of that, what kinds of things are their to scale?

1. Entry points for content first communication
2. Entry points for audience first communication
3. Content within a given content type
4. Content Types
5. Other audiences aside from friends, contacts, and groups of them

1) Entry points for content first communication

This is like the Android intent or the Send Plugin currently being worked on. These are things that are attached to a given piece of content on your phone and make it easier to share that to multiple audiences.

I'm not sure of the impact this will have (given we already have an Android intent) but seems relatively easy and we are already working on it and has the potential to get more content into the system. (Some data we should look at here is see how many photos are shared via the Android Intent, and how many messages in general are shared through it).

I'm not sure of other platform-based ways to scale this out.

2) Entry points for audience first communication

This would be something like, if I'm playing words with friends with Doug, there can be a "Chat with Doug" button, that when I click, pops open a chat head with Doug, so I can easily talk to him while playing the game. On iOS it would fast app switch to Messenger and then we could have a back button that brings you back to the app afterward.

I'm not entirely sure if other apps would want to implement this, but it generally seems positive as well.

3) Additional Content within a given content type

Some content types have a bunch of pieces of content inside of them that you pick out and share to express yourself. Stickers is the one example we have right now, but this would also apply to things like Memes, Links, Animated Gifs, etc... And even to more unique content types like games if we had them.

As more content types come to exist it's really important to nail content discovery and the picking out experience. For example, it needs to be easy to find the right sticker pack you want to download, and it needs to be easy to choose the perfect sticker to express yourself. This is an important thing to solve.

In addition to that, we could scale this out in a few ways. One way is with a content-creator approach, where it's really easy for official content creators to create or curate content. For example, professional illustrators can make stickers and a curator of some sort could pick out the 20 'angry face' animated gifs. Another way to do this is to take it further and crowd source it to all users. This would allow for tons of content of the types we've chosen to flow through the system and be easily choosable from as a way to send.

It would be helpful to understand here how much value each additional sticker pack provides and if we think scaling it out could provide significantly more (my gut is it could, but it would be nice to have more data here).

We can do this for Stickers as well as future content types that this makes sense for.

4) New Content Types

It's important that we have a nearly frictionless experience for the head types of content. These are things like text, photos (including selfies), video clips, audio clips, stickers, and location. I actually think there are a few more we would do ourselves as well if we were making a platform.

But there are way more potential types of things you could share beyond that, where the friction to create it is less of a problem. For example, a marauders map type of content that constantly shares everyone in the threads location once they opt in for x amount of time, or if I want to send a poll where everyone in a group can vote, or if I want to share a todo list with the group. These are things that aren't as common so its ok if they aren't easily accessible and low friction, but do provide enough value where it's still probably worth a few extra clicks to do them.

Enabling ways for more content types is something that could be good as well but I imagine its a lot more important to nail the head first.

5) Other audiences aside from friends, contacts, and groups of them

This would be enabling interaction with pages or apps. This is the kind of stuff where you can talk to your electronics, place an order at a restaurant, or I haven't thought through this as much (I want to think through, what would it be? would my mom do it? Would my 13 year old cousin do it? Do I think it will change our trajectory or be a real differentiator?)

Any other ideas of types of things to scale from within the base product? Or of ways to scale things?

I think a lot of these could make sense eventually, but I'm not convinced right now is the right timing to build/release them. I'd personally choose to invest heavily eng-wise in getting out the future base product out there (spaces, content first, the head content types, etc...) since every month we fall further and further behind versus building it with platform stuff in parallel. But regardless, we should think through them.

Beyond that, what other things could a platform type mentality unlock. Something that doesn't really fit into scaling is building a separate chat plugin (that doesn't use fb messages at all) that developers can use to easily embed chat in there apps. Any other ideas?

Subject: Re: Thoughts on a Messenger Platform

Mark:

A few of us got together today to discuss Messenger Platform and your note. We have some time reserved to discuss this topic with you tomorrow, but we don't think we made enough progress for that discussion quite yet. Our plan is to continue meeting as a group and then meet with you early in the New Year. That said, happy to keep the time if there is additional context you want to share or if you want discuss our progress (highlights below).

#1: Person to Person: Send in Messenger

Platform has been slowly working on this feature and we should be done with a cut of the product in January to review with you + Mike. Not likely to immediately help with reach (# of people using Messenger) or richness (most requested content types), but it should help with branding/awareness (similar to the Like Button) and have modest uplift in sends. Latest mocks: <https://facebook.box.com/messenger-platform>.

#2: Messenger Content Platform

This divides up into two areas: Sticker Platform + Games Platform. The Messenger team has done some work on Sticker Platform, but found that they could get all the 3rd party stickers they wanted without it, now focusing on the top 1st party content types (video, selfies, etc.). On the Games front, we are still thinking through what it would be mean to play turn-based games in Messenger. Doing some technical and design work to see what is possible in terms of content types and game play.

#3: App to Person: Messages + Agents

We talked about a couple of different scenarios here including Uber (car is here), sales (10% off), etc. The one that seemed the most compelling was local (maybe we even have a "Places" tab in Messenger). We need to spend a little more time discussing this idea as a group before we have definitive next steps.

#4: Messenger Agents

It seems like we could build #3 and then layer in #4. We think the natural language element of this would be the most difficult, so you could imagine only supporting a domain specific language. We are going to see if we can make progress on #3 and then revisit.

On Dec 9, 2013, at 12:45 PM, Mark Zuckerberg <zuck@fb.com> wrote:

I've been thinking a lot about what a Messenger Platform might look like and wrote up all of my thoughts on this. I wanted to be thorough, so this is very long. Hang in there.

This work falls between two teams -- Messenger and Platform -- and as such I'm worried that we're not thinking about it enough or prioritizing it appropriately.

Given how important messaging has become relative to News Feed where our platform primarily focuses, it seems like there is a large opportunity here, both to extend Messenger in a unique and differentiated way compared to other messaging products and to extend our development platform to another extremely important surface.

For Messenger, I think differentiation is extremely important and something we haven't focused on yet. We've spent the past 6-12 months catching up to WhatsApp and competitors on table stakes like performance, reliability, pushability, etc. This work isn't done and we will continue to do it, including catching up in areas like groups.

But to get people to ditch WhatsApp and switch to Messenger, it will never be sufficient to be 10% better than them or add fun gimmicks on any existing attribute or feature. We will have to offer some new fundamental use case that becomes important to people's daily lives.

The reason a platform is attractive to me is that it is completely new and brings different kinds of utility and content into the Messenger experience. Just like News Feed started out as friends content only but eventually expanded to include more content that is now critical to everyday engagement, I think there's an opportunity to do this with Messenger as well. We will face some of the same criticisms like "this experience should just be about my friends", but with the right defaults, controls and separation between the different types of content, I think we can make this a massively net positive addition without meaningfully reducing signal to noise or making the app worse for messaging friends. I will get into details below on the options for doing this.

As a side note, just like with News Feed, I think expanding beyond just friends content will eventually be the single key to turning Messenger into a business. We're obviously not focused on this yet, but it's worth considering because if this assumption is true, then it suggests others will eventually evolve in this direction too. We have meaningful advantages in infrastructure, SDK deployment and experience in executing a platform direction now. But if we wait too long, those advantages will go away.

For Platform, the key reason to focus on this is opening up another valuable surface beyond News Feed. This is important not only to expand, but because News Feed and therefore our current platform may actually be getting less valuable over time as more behavior moves to more private mediums like messaging.

Our current platform plan feels like we're going to invest a lot of energy to improve the Platform / News Feed experience for little marginal gain. The surface feels mature to me already. We're focused on quality because we think the issue is that the cost of using our platform is too high, when the bigger issue is that the value is too low compared to emerging alternatives. We do have real quality work to do, but we must also acknowledge that no amount of quality fixes will increase the potential value of using our platform.

Focusing now on opening up a new surface seems like a much better strategy. Perhaps the biggest reason we're not considering it as much as we should be is that organizationally the Platform and Messenger teams are very disconnected, so it is not within the Platform team's scope to unilaterally decide to do this. This is an unfortunate reason not to explore this.

The other major reason we haven't considered it sufficiently is because fear of spam. This is a completely reasonable fear given the experience with our existing platform when we rolled it out. That said, we have since gotten platform to a place where it is not spammy and it is a small part of our overall signal to noise complaints, while still building it into a $1 billion business.

This proves to me that it is possible to build something extremely valuable that is not spammy. In fact, if we had gotten the quality balance right from the beginning and not repeatedly thrashed our ecosystem, our platform business and engagement from it would almost certainly be much larger than even the $1 billion it is today.

So not only do I think it's possible to learn from our mistakes and do this well, but I also think this is probably a much bigger opportunity than we intuitively estimate if we can pull this off.

Below, I'm going to outline four basic Messenger Platform ideas. They go from smallest and simplest to biggest and most complex. They are not mutually exclusive, so we can and probably should do multiple of them.

1. Send a message API / button

Many apps have Like and Share buttons, encourage you to write on friends' timelines and use other broad social distribution tools. However, sharing is becoming increasingly private and many more people would use these to if you could just send a message to the right people privately with the content instead. If something like this was widely deployed, people would probably share a lot more content from apps. Surprisingly, there is no easy way to do this.

This is the simplest and easiest thing we can do. It would probably be meaningfully positive for developers, somewhat positive for differentiating the Messenger brand as more of a app-wide utility, positive as a feature for people when they need it, and it would not meaningfully change message volume. Still, this is low risk and positive for all constituents, so it seems like we should push further on this.

Historically, we might have had to worry about apps incentivizing people to send spammy messages to their friends, but now we effectively enforce our policies and can limit any behavior we don't want. Because of this, I don't think spam is a meaningful risk.

One nice feature of this is it's quite defensible and uses our installed developer base.

The closest thing that some apps do is import contacts and encourage you to SMS, but that's very heavyweight if the app has no other reason to import your contacts. By contrast, most apps have the Facebook SDK and if the person signs in then the app can get this capability for free.

SMS will not get meaningfully simpler over time because it is decentralized and nobody has an incentive to improve it. In some countries it also costs money, which is a fundamental disadvantage.

WhatsApp has no developer platform. I'd be surprised if they didn't develop one over time, but our deployed base is a meaningful advantage here.

2. Content Platform in Messenger

Stickers feel like a toy implementation of expression. They're valuable and get at a fundamental need for lighter weight emotional expression and engagement, but having single companies curate sets of stickers seems very suboptimal.

Over the long term, it seems like independent artists must be able to submit and sell their work, and there must be some kind of store that more effectively surfaces new content such that the best content can win. This will increase the overall quality and breadth of the content and make it a completely universal feature that everyone uses everyday.

It also seems thinking about this as just stickers is very limiting. This should include other forms of expression and entertainment, including memes, videos, games and other kinds of content that can be consumed within a message thread. The long term state of these will be to have an open market for them as well, rather than a list of content curated by individual companies.

It will be pretty easy to do this for stickers, memes and videos. For stickers, this could be a real business for artists and many will also want to distribute their work for free. For memes and videos, I assume they will be free and people will distribute them for free for fun. This will likely increase message sends and engagement on Messenger, perhaps meaningfully, but I doubt it's fundamental enough to get people to switch apps.

Where this really gets interesting is with in-message games and apps. It feels a unreasonable today to expect people would play many games in messages instead of switching to the game itself, but as messaging becomes and increasingly central part of the mobile experience, this inversion seems quite possible to me.

I actually think it's a great aspirational goal to make messaging central a lot of how people interact with content on their phones. The more ambitious ideas below will focus on extending this theme, but for now we'll focus on games.

Intuitively, it's easy to imagine simple games like the rock-paper-scissors prototype built in a hackathon to be played in messages. Sending stickers back and forth often feels like a game, and this feels like extendable behavior.

We could probably build a simple game platform based on the idea of people being able to send stickers (as "moves"). Whenever a sticker is played, the app the sticker is associated with gets its server pinged so it can update the game state, and then the app can send back an image or video of the game state that gets embedded in the thread.

This would be simple enough to make many fun games like rock-paper-scissors, hangman / Words with Friends, all of the popular quiz games and essentially any game with an interface that only requires tapping on an item to play it.

This would likely be pretty easy to build and would be very fun. Given how popular these games are, I think there's a meaningful chance this turns into a big growth driver for us.

Keep in mind one key advantage this games platform has: you don't need to install a game to play it. If someone sends you a sticker, you just get the stickers you need to play immediately. Games will spread extremely virally. Given how big these quiz apps and things like Words with Friends have gotten, it's not out of the question that this could drive 100 million more people to use Messenger.

That said, there are a few big limitations that will make it harder to expand beyond this in games:

- Due to policy, we can't build a full executable environment within our apps. This prevents apps with richer UIs from working in this way unless we develop a workaround.
- Lack of business model will make it less likely that the best developers invest in this. This isn't hopeless and there are possible ideas to explore like paid stickers with special powers similar to what you'd pay for in a normal game. Even without this, indie developers will still be able to make a lot of good simple games anyway.
- Even if we solve these issues and enable more complex games, at some point it will always just be better to play a more complex game in its own app. So it's probably worth investing to move the line of what people play in messages somewhat, but not a huge amount.

Overall though, building the simple games platform described here should be very easy and high leverage, so I think we should consider doing this soon. I also think moving any content we offer -- including stickers, memes and games -- into a better designed and more open market that anyone can contribute to.

3. App-to-person messages and agents

Those are the basic ideas. Here's where I think it actually starts to get really powerful.

Beyond enabling person-to-person messages and interaction, another obvious mode to consider is app-to-person or public figure-to-person messages and interaction.

Making this leap is somewhat analogous to News Feed transitioning from being just about friends to then being about both friends and public entities. This will fundamentally change the definition of what Messenger is, and that will come with some tradeoffs, but ultimately I think it will be overwhelmingly positive if we pull it off.

I also think it is one of the only truly game changing ideas I've heard that is a fundamental enough differentiator to make every single person need to use Messenger in addition to SMS or WhatsApp if we can make this work.

Before getting into how this would work, I want to address the obvious issues of spam and signal to noise.

A key difference from our initial Platform launch is that now we have the right tools and we've learned the right lessons to make this a much better experience than our News Feed / notifications platform ever was right out of the gate.

To prevent spam, the biggest thing we can do is make it easy to turn off (after you turn it on). We never got this quite right on desktop and even iOS and Android struggle with this. But it should be easy in Messenger.

The first time you get a message from a public entity, we should give you a prominent button to turn off receiving any more messages from that entity. After that, we should just make it so that if you ever delete the thread, we either kill the entity's ability to message you again or at the very minimum ask you if you want to do that. That interaction is much easier on Messenger than it ever was on desktop, so I expect people will use it.

Those controls -- plus only allowing apps and entities you've connected with to send you a first message to begin with -- should be sufficient to make sure people don't get messages they don't want.

It's also worth noting again that we are much better at manually enforcing policies than we used to be, so we can now set policies like "no mass messages to all your users" if we want. I'm not sure we'd want that rule specifically, but we now have the capacity to enforce this effectively if we did.

After spam, the next question is signal to noise. There are several variables we can play with here including having a different push sound for entity messages, not badging for entity messages, no push sound at all for entity messages or theoretically even not pushing entity messages at all and only having them be visible when you open the app. That last option is not recommended long term if we want this to be viable, but it's an example of the full spectrum of options.

So that's a short version of why this doesn't have to be a bad experience. Before getting into why I think this could be awesome long term, I want to call out two competitive near term issues we face.

The first is WhatsApp adding a feature like this for public figures. Line and Kakao already have something like this for public figures, so this is completely reasonable to expect and we've even heard they're working on it. If the space is going to move in this direction, being the leader and establishing the brand and network effects matters a lot. This alone should encourage us to consider this soon.

Another anecdote is from Twitter. One day I was in a restaurant and heard one guy tell his friend that he just got a text from Jay Z. He hadn't. He got a tweet and was subscribed such that he got notified about it. The reason this is interesting to me is that we have this religion around thinking about these channels as completely separate things and most people do not.

There is no rule that public figures go in feed and private messages go in Messenger. Over the long term, I think public figures and apps will go in Messenger just like friend messages, and private photos from friends will go in News Feed as well.

When the world shifts like this, being first is how you build a brand and network effect. We have an opportunity to do this at scale, but that opportunity won't last forever. I doubt we even have a year before WhatsApp starts moving in this direction.

Now, I'd like to finally get to what I think this could be.

In its most basic form, this is just another notification channel or where for apps and public entities to reach people. This is not why this is exciting to me, but it's worth calling this out because it is extremely powerful. This alone, even with many limits and controls, would add a lot of meaningful content to Messenger and would make every single app and many public figures want to integrate with Facebook much more.

Like I said above, I think we have the controls and experience to make this a good experience. An app or page would only get the ability to send you a first message when you connect to it, so there will be no viral spam. And it will be easy to turn off inline, so there shouldn't be direct spam either. This is simple but powerful and we shouldn't overlook this.

What's more exciting is not just using this as a one way push channel, but making it so you can interact with apps through Messenger.

Going back to the games case from above, it is conceivable that messaging will become the backbone of all of your activity on your phone and that apps will start to become a feature of messaging rather than messages being a feature of apps. This has happened with many important services that were once believed to be small features. People thought search was a small feature of websites but now most things are features of search. People thought social networks and communities were features of sites, but now most types of content are features of Facebook. It's conceivable that as messaging grows in importance, many apps will become features of messaging.

The simplest possible UI for this is that you send a message to an app and it does something and sends a message back. This could work for pages and places too.

For example, I could send a restaurant a message asking for a reservation and it could just reply with whether I got the reservation and when. From a user experience perspective, this is a great UI. I don't want to have to call a restaurant and the apps to do this are terrible. Also, the natural language processing to do this works with modern techniques so this isn't a huge technology challenge either.

I could see this working for ordering food, getting movie tickets and so on. Nobody wants to talk to people for these tasks, but the most efficient UI by far is language.

I could also see this working for having limited interaction with public figures. There are probably certain basic things that people want to ask public figures, and those could easily be programmed in to facilitate a more personal two way interaction.

With a mature version of this system, there would probably be lots of new use cases that don't exist yet.

That said, one significant limiting factor of this system is that you'd have to know about an entity before you could message it. So if you wanted to get a cab, you'd need to know to message Uber. And by that point, for apps with good UIs like Uber, you might as well just use their app and not learn a new messaging behavior. I will address this problem in the final and most ambitious idea below.

Overall though, there are several powerful ideas in app-to-person messaging that are simple and valuable. Basic push messaging with good controls is an important feature and may soon become a point of competition. An API for apps and pages to reply to messages would also be simple to build and could unlock some interesting use cases.

4. Messenger Agent Platform

The ideal agent would not require you to message a different thread for each type of task you want to complete. Instead, the ideal agent would be able to take any natural language input string and do what you intended.

One reason I believe in this so much is because I find I'd much rather communicate with Andrea via Messenger than use different apps to complete tasks myself. Natural language is a great common UI for any task you can imagine, and having an agent that can handle new kinds of tasks -- including ones you've never dealt with before and don't have an app for -- is extremely valuable. If Messenger came with an Andrea for everyone, that would clearly be amazing for the world.

This is more of a Platform / Utility challenge than a messaging one, but if we could enable this it would definitely drive adoption and engagement with Messenger.

This agent problem is similar to building Siri or Google Now, except I think it's an ideal problem to use a platform approach to solve, which is very different from what Google and Apple are doing.

Google approaches the problem from the perspective of search. Their default is to show you links where you might find your answer. Sometimes they give you an answer to a question directly, but they don't carry out commands for you. They're building conversational search to fit more into this agent-like use pattern, but they view that as a layer on top of search rather than the core product.

Apple approaches the problem as a closed system, which is typical for them. I actually think they are doing some things very well, especially in designing Siri to execute commands in addition to returning information. However, they're very limited by a couple of things, including not supporting text (only voice) and only supporting services they integrate themselves (closed approach).

I think there's an opportunity to use a platform approach to build a superior execution-oriented agent.

The way it would work is that developers could register their own agents with us that could handle certain types of requests. When we get a request, we'd figure out which developers' agents might be able to handle that request and we'd send it to them. They'd each return whether they needed more information or were in fact able to handle the request, their suggested response and maybe a confidence score for how likely they think they are right. We'd then pick the one we think is best (calibrated by people's feedback) and then we'd ask the person to confirm. After confirmation, we'd execute the plan using that developer's agent.

For example, you might say "get me two tickets to see Hunger Games at 9pm". We'd parse the input enough to understand it's a movie ticket request and then pass it off to Fandango and others. Fandango might require a theater to be specified but another agent might just use your location and has a good history of positive results, so we'd go with that one and reply with a message like "I can get you two tickets at Shoreline at 9:10pm. Is this right?" After that, you just hit the Like button and we'd pass your credit card number off to the service to complete the transaction and maybe send you another message with a link to the record of the transaction.

This idea is clearly the most ambitious and riskiest of the ones I've mentioned, but I think this approach could work well and be quite leveraged. With a relatively small team at Facebook, we can build a system that leverages a lot of work outside. We can build a developer community that builds agents for virtually any task you can imagine, ranging from running errands to looking up shuttle times or other information.

To recap, the four ideas discussed above are:

1. Send a message API / button
 - Enabling devs to promote person-to-person messaging in their apps
2. Content Platform in Messenger
 - Turning stickers into an open market
 - Adding memes and videos to the market
 - Building a simple in-message games platform
3. App-to-person messages and agents
 - Enabling apps and pages to send messages, with strict controls to ensure quality
 - Enabling people to send messages to apps and pages and get replies
4. Messenger Agent Platform
 - Building a meta-agent and a platform to let agents register to take on tasks

If we want to develop some of these ideas, we would need to determine which teams will be building which pieces. I imagine that the Platform team would do most of the work for (1) and (4), but the Messenger team would perhaps do most of the work for (2) and (3). All of these will likely require some work and full support from both teams though, so a good next step is to figure out which of these we are excited about building now.

I know this was very long, so I appreciate that you've read all the way down to here and are taking the time to consider this carefully. If it makes you feel better about having to read all of this, just think about how long it took me to write on my phone! Please take the time to think through this, because I wouldn't have spent hours writing it up if I didn't seriously believe there was something important here to consider now.

Subject: Re: Thoughts on Messenger business ecosystem

This is a very compelling vision. We have been talking a lot in the ads group about considering pay for performance arrangements (Cost Per Acquisition (CPA), rev share on cars sold, that kind of thing) and this would be an elegant way to bridge the gap.

There is one thread missing at the bottom that I would add that I think makes this even more compelling which is closing the loop with a small business CRM so we can actually use the relationship between feed and messenger to accelerate both sides of the business. For example ensuring that businesses have an ability to buy ads in feed targeted to everyone who is talking about their restaurant or interacting with their app through messenger, and then have those ads drive people to activate in messenger. This is probably at the intersection of pages, ads, messages, and identity. Sam has done a lot of thinking here already and he and I are going to connect soon on fleshing that out a bit, but it includes a ton of work on the (probably page) admin interface.

Useful language: the marketing funnel is often broken into 3 parts.

1/ The top of the funnel is driving Awareness (~$300B annually). This is about getting people familiar with your brand, product or service. This is things like primetime TV and magazine ads. On Facebook this is video ads, lookalikes, and page likes.

2/ The middle of the funnel is driving Consideration (~$320B annually).

This is about getting people who know about what you do to want to buy it (or buy it sooner). This is daytime TV and magazine ads. On Facebook this is Custom Audiences or link page posts.

3/ The bottom of the funnel is driving Conversion (~$60B annually). This is about the last mile: getting someone who wants something to buy it right now. This is nighttime TV and direct mail. It is dominated digitally by Search but we actually have quite a few offerings here (offers, MAIA, App Reengagement, Link Page Post, Conversion Optimization, etc).

I mention this only because big brands spend money at all 3 levels of the funnel and chastise us for associating them exclusively with Awareness objectives. For example, I can imagine Tide being on messenger and answering questions about whether I need to separate my whites out for tide with bleach or whether I can use dove soap safely with young children.

I think it is safe to say we could shift more marketing spend towards conversion with a product like the one discussed below, but I think the even bigger revenue gains would be our ability to get more money higher in the funnel from feed if we could connect it to conversion in messenger.

Other small notes:

- Business entities: this is way more complex than it might seem but we have a good head start there with business manager for whoever ends up owning this.
- loyalty programs: data policies are critical to whether or not we succeed here at scale

Well, if it's like mobile, then wouldn't each team own their API like they own their iOS integration? I think that natural tension would be the biggest risk.

That is the right question.

I think we only do it if the messenger team wants it (and probably staffs it). It's like mobile - a shared framework, then individual teams own their features.

It makes platform a tool for the company.

Biggest risk is getting rest of company to accept three-year back compat.

Messenger integration. Messenger is existential threat for is. Making out messaging app the de facto web standard by integrating with all other apps out there.

What's an example of something we would build under the 'FB Product Strategy' bucket?

This seems like an interesting direction to explore.

I think the key question here is basically -- what's the business model (and why does it merit investment in a company where we have no one working on our tablet experience, despite 100M MAU)?

I think understanding the business model will make clear which services we have to build, which would be nice, and which don't make sense.

I think there are probably 2-3 clear business models for platform, but they don't really bear on the Foo as a Service stuff:

- Developer Ads: We build stuff in the order it makes us money here.

- FB Product Strategy: We build integrations as it helps the business models of specific Facebook products. E.g., we do feed if it makes feed better. We do messaging if it helps messenger win. We enable people to wire-up to our entity graph if that makes sharing easier or helps crowdsourcing efforts, etc.

- Mobile Developer Mindshare: We do all this to lock-in mobile developers to our stack (vs. iOS or Google). Prioritization would be in terms of features that developers needs that probably maximize leverage/lock-in.

Thoughts?

1. Agreed. I love this as the cornerstone of the "build pillar". Jay P. really doesn't want to do VMs or block storage as it is not leveraged per se.

2. Also agreed, perhaps the key is to talk about people-centric/aware mobile apps with examples that demonstrate value outside of the consumer space? A mobile CRM solution would be a great example.

On Aug 12, 2013, at 5:42 PM, "Ilya Sukhar" <is@fb.com> wrote:

So, in general, I love this. Two initial things come to mind that I would change if I were pitching this:

1. I'd position Platform's sweet spot as the layer just above the infrastructure. Sure, we'll give you access to VMs just like AWS, but we won't win there. We win by providing higher level services that developers don't want to build and that AWS isn't good at (e.g. database, graph, analytics, feed, etc). We can build these services in a mobile-focused, people-aware manner that they can't. Don't think about servers and don't think about devices. This is basically the Parse pitch amplified.
2. We shouldn't box ourselves in too early by thinking of the product as a 1-1 mapping between FB infrastructure and service. I think we can go wider than just apps that are effectively "facebook plus content for a specific vertical".

Facebook Platform v.Next

Key Questions

What is a multi-billion dollar standalone developer business that has no impact on Facebook user trust?

What would it take for a Netflix and Airbnb (or the next Netflix or Airbnb) to shift from AWS to us?

If they won't move completely, due to sunk costs, is there a way that they could use our developer products on top of AWS in a way that is valuable for both them and us?

FB People Services

Facebook People Services are the fastest way to build a people-centric app. What is people-centric app? Think of Netflix, Spotify or Airbnb. These are consumer services with different business models, but with a common theme: they are centered on people and the content they care about. Each of these services needs to build out the following components for their service to be successful:

- A real identity system including payments
- A graph of entities (videos, songs, places) and people-based connections (movies watched, song listened, places I have stayed, etc.)
- A ranked feed of these entities and connections (movies to watch, songs to listen to, where should I stay, etc.)
- A growth engine that they can use for new user sign-up and reengagement
- Core infrastructure that enables them to host content and run their core experiences

As it turns out, Facebook has developed all of these components for use in our own consumer service. Facebook People Services is simply us taking these components and making them available for 3rd party developers.

The best analogy is Amazon taking at their online retail business and making their core app infrastructure available as Amazon Web Services. This is the same play, but at a higher level (not just compute, storage, etc.). Further, this contrasts with the existing Facebook Platform in that it is not, initially, tied to Facebook user data. In fact, one can imagine Twitter, Path, Line, Snapchat (all products that could be viewed as competitors with the Facebook app) being built on these services. To push the Amazon analogy further, Amazon Video competes head to head with Netflix, but they both sit on the same infrastructure: AWS.

The Services

Identity as a Service

We make the world's largest real identity infrastructure available to your business. This is same identity system used by the Facebook app (UserEnt, etc.) that you can use to address your app's identity needs. This is a separate identity from the user's Facebook identity, in that each app has their own user entity tied specifically to their app. This service allows you to handle new user sign-up, account verification, account management, user integrity (fraud/malicious user activity) and payments using the same services that the Facebook app does. We provide convenient tools to load your existing user data or federate with your existing user systems.

Graph as a Service

The user graph is a service that provides a scalable collection, storage and query of user activities within your product. This service is the production of our Ent and EntQuery mechanisms, populated with app specific data. In addition, the Graph service leverages the "Open Graph", a Facebook hosted data set that contains all the public locations, movies, songs, shows, celebrities, etc. that can be referenced from your app specific graph.

Feed as a Service

The feed service provides a real-time or batched ranked feed of changes in your app's graph that can be displayed to consumers. For example, the home screen of Netflix is simply a feed of all the unwatched movie entities that may be interesting to the user. The feed service makes building this kind of people-centric feature extremely simple for your app.

Growth as Service

The growth service helps developers grow and engage your user base. This service leverages Facebook's deep knowledge and success at growing and retaining our own user base, but provides it directly to you. This includes email campaigns, NetEgo within your app, etc.

Infrastructure as a Service

This service competes directly with AWS. It offers the same compute, storage and management infrastructure using by the Facebook app, but for your business.

[Thoughts?]

Facebook Platform v.Next

Key Questions

What is a multi-billion dollar standalone developer business that has no (or positive) impact on Facebook user trust?

What would it take for a Netflix and Airbnb (or the next Netflix or Airbnb) to shift from AWS to us?

If they won't move completely (sunk costs), is there a way that they could use our developer products on-top of AWS in a way that is valuable for both them and us?

FB People Services

Facebook People Services are the fastest way to build a people-centric business. What is people-centric app? Think of Netflix, Spotify or Airbnb. These are consumer services with different business models, but with a common theme: they are centered on people and the content they care about. Each of these services needs to build out the following component for their service to be successful:

- A "real" identity system
- A payment processing and reporting mechanism
- A graph of entities (videos, songs, places) and people-based connections (movies watched, song listened, places I have stayed, etc.)
- A ranked feed of these entities and connections (movies to watch, songs to listen to, where should I stay, etc.)
- A growth engine that they can use for new user sign-up and reengagement.

As it turns out, Facebook has developed all of these components for use in our own consumer service. Facebook People Services is simply us taking these components and making them available for 3rd party developers.

The best analogy is Amazon looking at their online retail business and making that infrastructure available as Amazon Web Services. This is the same play, but at a higher level (not just compute, storage, etc.). Further, this contrasts with the existing Facebook Platform in that it is not, initially, tied to Facebook user data. In fact, one can imagine Twitter, Path, Line, Snapshot (all products that could be viewed as competitors with the Facebook app) being built on these services. To push the Amazon analogy further, Amazon Video competes head to head with Netflix, but they both sit on the same infrastructure: AWS.

We provide convenient tools to load your existing user data or federate with your existing user systems. We provide a complete set of APIs and mobile SDKs for your engineering teams to build or migrate your product's identity system.

Graph as a Service

The user graph is a service that provides a scalable collection, storage and query of user activities within your product. This service is the production of our Ent and EntQuery mechanisms, populated with app specific data. In addition, the Graph service leverages the "Open Graph", a Facebook People Service hosted data set that contains all the public locations, movies, songs, shows, celebrities, etc. that can be referenced from the app specific graph.

Javi -

We've done some early thinking but are now going out to partners to get a better understanding of what we could build that would be used.

Personally, I'm more passionate about your first use case (what Layer built) and would like to see us have an offering for developers and partners.

The second use case is something I haven't thought as much about but Evernote and Dropbox asked us if we'd be interested in building this.

Bryan is leading this thinking for us. Would it make sense to put some time on you and Vernal's calendar to present our findings when we're done?

Are we trying to enable developers to have messaging in their products? (that is what layer seemed to be doing from my limited quick read)

Are we trying to enable our messenger users to send special types of content from these apps in a rich media way? (in that case the devil is likely on what type of apps make real sense / bring real utility / the integration points)

+Javi (was having a side thread about this)

I think there's general excitement to eventually do this with messaging, but the near-term goals around messaging are much more focused on fundamentals (growing mobile-to-mobile messaging, fixing perception that Facebook Messaging is just about web chat, and fixing deliverability issues). But WhatsApp launching a competing platform is definitely something I'm super-paranoid about.

Just wanted to flag this for a couple other folks too b/c I actually think it's important that we get to a place where we can offer developers a solution for their communication needs. I realize that the roadmaps for having any solution is a ways out but I think it would be great for us to start signaling more aggressively to developers that we are serious about it. Bryan is leading the partnership effort for our team.

A few anecdotal data points to consider:

- We know our big messenger competitors are trying to build this... Evernote told us that they'd like to leverage FB for messeging instead having to go do integrations with the WeChats and WhatsApps of the world.
- It simply feels right. Vernal — I think the best example of this is the current Nike Challenge chat thread. Its been hilarious, but intuitively it feels like it should be powered by FB and syndicated to FB.
- Broader ecosystem validation. Layer won the TechCrunch Disrupt prize. External validation that ppl see value in this product.

I have already talked with Michelle at Songkick and they would love to test this. This was their #1 ask from Vernal when he met Michelle ad the team in June. They don't mind doing mobile only (Chatheads maybe rather than Titan) for now as they get 50% of their traffic on mobile these days.

Datings apps are also keen on integrating Messenger. OG is not the ideal for those folks, but private conversations are certainly important. Tinder, Hot or Not are good examples of app that use in-app messaging already.

Eddie, Bryan — Looks like the developer community wants Messenger as a Platform. Layer won TechCrunch Disrupt: <http://techcrunch.com/2013/09/11/and-the-winner-of-techcrunch-disrupt-sf-2013-is-layer/>. No reason we should cede this space to them or anyone else.

+Team — Let's make sure that we're teeing up conversations with our head partners about leveraging us for scalable communications. I know that we recently beta launched a Titan integration with Netflix, but where are we with our other conversations with the other partners — i.e. Dropbox, Evernote, Nike+? I think we've discussed a few others. I'd like to make sure we're engaged now so they don't consider leveraging another service.

Layer Brings A Scalable Communications Platform To Any Mobile Or Web App

SARAH PEREZ

posted 3 hours ago

6 Comments

Layer, a new startup launching at TechCrunch Disrupt San Francisco 2013 today, is ambitiously attempting to build a communications fabric – a “layer,” if you will – for the Internet. The technology, initially available to developers in the form of mobile app SDKs and open sourced components, will enable text, voice, video, file-sharing and more across applications, whether those apps run on iOS, Android, or even the web. You can think of it as something like a Stripe for communications.

The company was founded in March by CEO Tomaž Štolfa, founder of vox.io, and Executive Chairman Ron Palmeri, who previously launched a number of notable companies as managing director of Minor Ventures, including Grand Central (now Google Voice), OpenDNS, Scout Labs and Swivel. Palmeri is also the founder of MkII Ventures, and co-founder of TechCrunch Disrupt SF 2011 runner-up Prism Skylabs.

Explains Štolfa, most developers today want to focus on the final experience, not building the infrastructure for each application feature. “If they want to build maps in their product, they don’t have to rebuild the entire maps stack,” he says. “If they want to accept a credit card payment, they don’t have to rebuild the entire credit card stack. But they have to rebuild the entire communications stack if they want to send a message from one user to another.”

In doing so, developers have to solve some very difficult problems – authentication, security, cross-device synchronization, offline message management, and more. To just get a few of these things right, a good team might need a few months at least. To get all of them right, they would probably need more like six or nine months.

Layer’s alternative, then, involves adding fewer than 10 lines of code to integrate messaging into app. It’s also fewer than 10 lines of code to add other things, like voice or video. The idea is to simplify the process of adding these communications capabilities to apps, while also eliminating concerns surrounding infrastructure, or how to manage scaling.

Initially, Layer is going to be available as an iOS or Android SDK for mobile app developers, but the team plans to introduce web support soon. They’re also offering a set of open source components called the Layer UI kit. These components (for iOS 7 and Android) work with the SDK, allowing developers to quickly build out specific user interface features, like an address book or a message sorter, for example.

“Those things are to make it easy for developers to understand how services can be exposed in the client,” explains Palmeri. “The SDK is the thing that allows us to do very secure connectivity from a device to the cloud. But the cloud itself is where the scale comes in.” He likens this extensible architecture to something like Amazon Web Services – where a developer pays as they scale, but it remains more affordable than building out their own infrastructure instead.

The company plans to incentivize app developers to stay on the platform, even as they grow, by pricing it as free to start, then charging affordably for the cloud infrastructure when the developers become successful. (Pricing has not yet been set, however.)

The benefit to having a lot of apps using Layer is the network effects it could bring. Imagine, for example, that all the messaging apps out there (e.g., Path, Whatsapp, LINE, WeChat, Viber, MessageMe, etc.) could actually talk to each other. Users could then choose their preferred platform based on design or feature set, and not just which app had the most of their friends using it.

And as more apps adopt the technology, user demand could push other apps to do the same. Eventually, Layer plans to open source more than the UI, which could mean that bigger companies (think Google, Facebook, Microsoft/Skype) could interconnect with Layer-enabled applications, too, via APIs.

To be clear, Layer isn’t only for text-based messaging. As noted above, it’s designed to support any sort of communication, including voice calls, file and photo sharing, or even video. And the company is working to make media sharing more robust as well, so that when users send each other a link – like a link to an Instagram photo, for instance – the recipient would also see a preview of that content in the app (not entirely unlike how Twitter Cards work today, e.g.).

On stage, the company demonstrated some of the advantages of building apps with Layer, showing off how cross-platform communications could be smarter by syncing message state across devices. As a notification is read on one device, the notification is killed on others. This sort of intelligence would be built into Layer’s SDK.

The company is putting together a small but representative sample of 50 beta testers, who will integrate Layer into their apps. These include everything from a communications service for doctors and nurses, to a dating app, and even an app for children.

Interested developers are able to register their interest here, for when the platform opens up more broadly. In the meantime, the Layer website will feature sample code and guides, to help developers better understand the technologies.

Layer is advised by Jeremie Miller (inventor of XMPP), Jure Leskovec (Computer Science professor at Stanford), John Maeda (President of RISD), Dom Leca (Sparrow, Google), and Ryan Sarver (Twitter Platform).

Disclosure: One of Layer's seed investors is CrunchFund, a firm founded by Michael Arrington, who also founded TechCrunch. CrunchFund is not involved in selecting Battlefield participants.

Elliot and Erin-

In preparation for tomorrow's meeting with Mark, I'm attaching a master chart that shows all of the sensitive launches that are on the list to be discussed, along with some notations — the group's agreed-upon risk level, description, and timing, as well as an explanation (not shared with the broader group) about why we think this proposal is sensitive and what steps we might take to mitigate the risk. You'll also see a few places where we think the policy risk might be slightly lower than the overall estimated risk to the company.

We're still running down a few details so may have an update in the morning, but given the timing we wanted to get this to you as soon as possible.

Please also let us know if there's anything more that would be helpful going into the discussion, or if it would be helpful to set up time to talk through all of this live. This is obviously a lot of information to absorb and probably more detailed than you need, but we wanted you to be prepared with all of this since it sounds like Kate is planning to get a bit into the weeds with Mark tomorrow.

Also, thanks so much to Matt for his help putting this analysis together tonight.

Mobile Publishing: Last 30 Days/ Next 90 Days

David Engelberg
Strategic Partnerships, Mobile Games
December 17, 2013

Speaker Notes for Slide 1

Context:

- We've had one semi-global launch... we'll talk about that in a bit.
- For the new people, this is basically an opportunity to redirect the thrust of the program. The intent is to get to a point where the initial version of this program shows a clear path to something that is scalable and repeatable.

DRAFT

Context

Twice-weekly check-ins – are we on the right path?

Make sure we are reporting things relevant to you

- Effect of bursts
- Effect of sustains
- Insight into mobile ecosystem
- Etc. etc.

DRAFT

Agenda

- 1 Background
- 2 The Last 30 Days
- 3 The Next 90 Days
- 4 The Model

DRAFT What do we mean when we say publishing?

Right now...

- We provide initial marketing phase for high potential titles
- Facebook takes 30% of NET revenue

This is to prove that we can pick winners

- Winners are ROI+
- Winners are healthy NEKO spenders

Speaker Notes for Slide 4

Effectively, we want to prove we can provide the core element of a scalable solution. That's games.

DRAFT

If we can prove that we can identify winners:

We can start to explore scaling the program via projects already underway:

1. Ad network
2. Product innovations
3. Games hub
4. We can publish more games

Speaker Notes for Slide 5

The key to this entire program is to identify games that return our investment through ROI+ spends. We need games to have a long lifecycle (365+ days). Once we have that, this whole thing becomes a lot more interesting.

facebook

DRAFT

The last 30 days have been busy

DRAFT

- Redesigned program
 - Redefined revenue model
 - Established gates and process
 - (Almost) finished contract
- Globally burst Wind Runners
- 4 geo-beta games

Speaker Notes for Slide 7

- Wind Runners – more on this in a minute
- Geobeta games include: Draconus Rex, Dawn of Dragons, Time Quest Slots, Monster Legacy
 - Geobeta games coming up include: Age of Booty, Dr. Who, Lucky Play Casino

DRAFT

Previous Contract Structure

The goal of the contract is to help dev “cross the chasm”

1. Burst to drive organics ($100k with Fiksu)
2. Sustain growth ($400k in ad credits, operated by Ampush/PMD)
3. Subsidize continued growth for both publishing and ad $$$
 1. 100% of rev share earned in 60 days redeemed if on-FB spend
 2. 10% of net revenue earned on day 61 to day 365 rebated if on-FB spend

Complicated

Not scalable

Not enough $$$

Speaker Notes for Slide 8

A couple of big issues with this:

- 1) Scalability problems were problematic all over the place, including within the group
- 2) Due to Apple billing issues, it's possible this deal wouldn't be super helpful for developers
- 3) This isn't enough money – this deal attracts a specific type of developer we aren't ready to work with
 - 1) This is a nice template for a later version – it's absolutely something that some of the bigger developers (Kabam) were interested in

The first part of this project is really about proving only the core competency of picking winners – there isn't a need to overcomplicate the issue.

DRAFT

We weren't giving developers a chance

$500k budget isn't enough to boost and sustain a title

- Wordly spent $175k in 2 days = no.2 in free games
- Deer Hunter spent $950k in 15 days = no.1 in free games
- Wind Runner spent $100k in 1 day = no. 10 in free games for <24 hours

DRAFT

Restructured Contract

Previous version

- 8 total developers (6 hits)
- $500k per developer
 - $100k to Fiksu, $400k to Neko
- 30% rev share
- 100% NEKO subsidy first 60 days
- 10% subsidy last 305 days

Current version

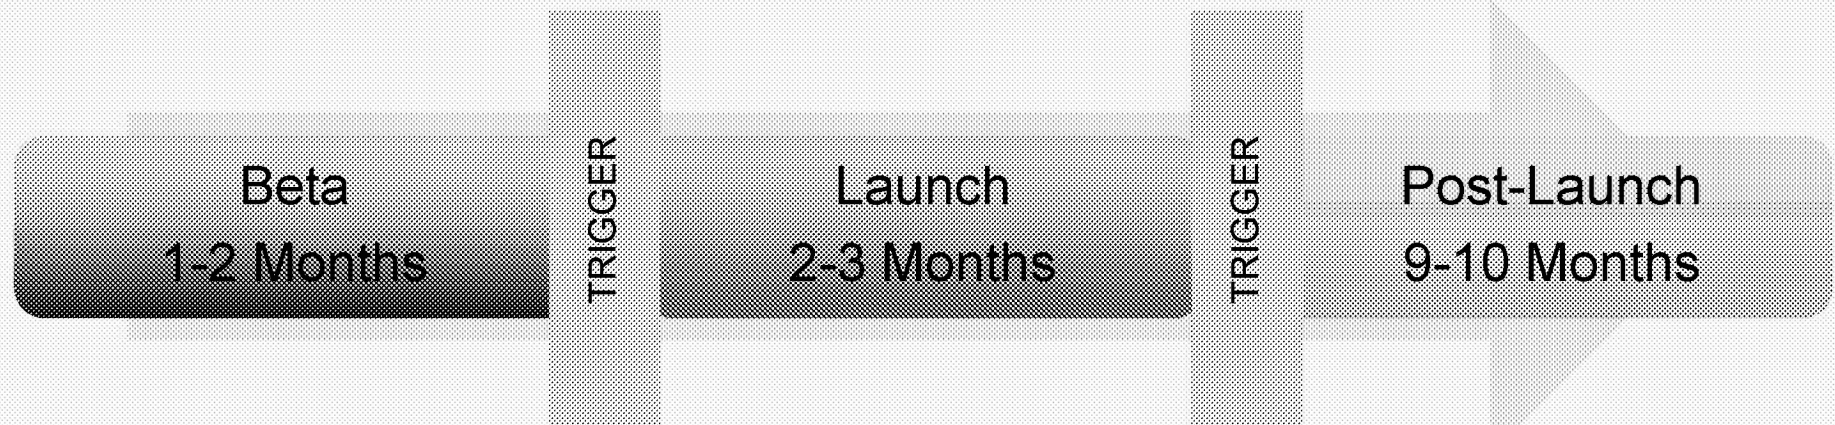

- 4 total developers (3 hits)
- $1m per developer in 2 installments
- 30% rev share

Speaker Notes for Slide 10

- Reduce the developers
- Focus on only one platform for titles
- Make our money go a lot farther
- Prove out core competency

Program and Objectives

DRAFT

Details

DRAFT

2014 Q1 Portfolio

We'll be focused on a diverse portfolio for Q1.

Each genre gives us insight into the $LTV > CPI$ calculus.

Some bets are safer than others.

Speaker Notes for Slide 21

When you take a look at models, it's a lot harder to make more casual titles (below a 0.10 ARPDAU) make sense without REALLY low CPIs.

I think that we should figure out what genres work too - a critical piece of the puzzle is figuring out if we want to do this program if we can only make midcore titles work.

DRAFT

Our Partners

We will be working with one burst vendor and one PMD

1. Fiksu will be handling our burst off-FB buys
 1. Days 0 to Days 2
2. Ampush (PMD) will be handling our FB sustain campaigns
 1. Days 3 to Days 59

Speaker Notes for Slide 22

We will be able to negotiate a lower-deal with Fiksu due to volume + FB

Ampush will be a valuable partner because we can hand the developer off to them after our 60 day responsibilities are up.

They are also very focused on proving out this relationship.

DRAFT

Our Methodology

Modeling

1. Biz Ops has created a 365 day benchmarking model to help us make bets
 1. Based on monetization, retention, and install volume
2. Will help us make smarter bets and sets tracking expectations

Geo-Beta

1. Ensure that metrics hold at scale (most critical for CPIs)

Speaker Notes for Slide 23

For each genre, there's typically one wild card that a developer can REALLY control.

We can talk about this model in-depth if you guys want.

DRAFT

Our Reporting

Contract defines a required daily reporting

We plan on using AppAnnie or asking for direct credentials

This is not a scalable solution

DRAFT

People to Know

DRAFT

People to know in mobile publishing

Primary point of contact:

- David Engelberg (MPK) – reach out to me and I can put you in touch with the right person. I am eminently available. Swing by.

Brains/Brawn of publishing:

- Sheila Rathnam (MPK)
- Aman Ghei (London)
- Dan Morris (MPK)

Speaker Notes for Slide 26

Sheila and I will be running a lot of our campaigns and executing on the devs we bring in...

Aman and Dan are the driving force behind the strategy of the publishing effort – they will be doing a lot of lead generation on the publishing front...

DRAFT

Why Mobile Publishing

DRAFT

Mobile Games Opportunity

1. SuperCell sold 51% of company for $1.5B

2. GungHo has a larger market cap than Nintendo

3. King.com planning IPO

Games drive lots of revenue.

FB doesn't get a lot of it.

Speaker Notes for Slide 28

You all know this, but FB currently derives 20%+ of its revenue from games. A small piece of that is mobile-focused, despite mobile+tablet growth accelerating.

Publishing is one way to explore alternative ways to monetize on these devices and lets us explore something that is not advertising.

DRAFT

Why Mobile Publishing?

Facebook can drive revenue on mobile in a few ways

1. Make games
2. Process Payments
3. Developer Ad Spend (MAIA/NEKO)
4. Mobile publishing

Speaker Notes for Slide 29

Processing payments is tricky right now developer ad spend is very profitable but highly commoditized and we are inventory restrained. It's a good thing to build and grow, but it's also good to have other options.
we aren't a games company nor do we want to be...

Mobile publishing is an opportunity to diversify our portfolio and move away from being strictly an ad network on top of other mobile platforms.

DRAFT

Mobile Publishing Opportunity

There is a growth opportunity in identifying these high ROI+ games and becoming a distribution channel

Kakao made $311 million as a games distributor in H1 2013

Line brings in nearly $100 million games

<http://thenextweb.com/asia/2013/07/16/korean-messaging-app-kakao-talks-games-platform-grossed-311-million-in-h1-2013/>

<http://techcrunch.com/2013/07/11/times-sunday-app-line/>

And their growth is accelerating!

DRAFT

Some background:

The Key to Mobile F2P is $LTV > eCPI$ (ROI+):

1. You need healthy game metrics
2. You need to have organic traffic
3. You need to buy high-quality users
4. You need to be viral

Every step costs $$$$. Most developers run out at Step 1.

Speaker Notes for Slide 31

Some background:

You need to design a game with high retention and high ARPDAU – we are leaving this up to the developer Organic traffic comes from being noticeable. This means having a spot on charts on the Google Play store and Apple iTunes. It also means that you're reducing the burden on buying users / viral channels, which means eCPI is going up.

Buying high-quality users comes from ad networks, but realistically, it comes from FB. This is the ONLY channel right now that effectively gives you high-value users.

Step 4 is an arguable one – card battle games like RoB and RTS like Modern War aren't viral, but they can get away with it with very high LTV. It will probably be important for some of our titles.

Facebook can solve a discovery problem here, while encouraging best in breed FB integrations and evangelizing the value of our FB ads solutions.

DRAFT

Our approach

For each game, we focus on three phases

1. Modeling

1. Produce 365 day game models from dev expectations/benchmarks

2. Geo-betas

3. Global rele

Speaker Notes for Slide 32

We'll start with a model that will become more sophisticated over time...

We also need to discuss how geo-betas are going to be handled.

Why do you have to listen to this? ^{DRAFT}

Weigh in on the program direction and goals

Inform reporting to best fit your needs

Ensure we are asking the right questions / driving to the right conclusions

Speaker Notes for Slide 33

This is a nascent program and we can adapt. We're still relatively nimble and lean.

DRAFT

KPIs of Mobile Publishing Program

By the end of 2014 Q1, we want to prove we can pick “winners”

1. We can choose 3 ROI+ games ($LTV > eCPI$)
2. We can be revenue neutral (minimum revenue to FB = $5m)
3. We can create new NEKO spenders (grow the system)

Speaker Notes for Slide 34

So, to start to test that model, we have a (hopefully) achievable goal in the next 4 months. That is to produce the following:

DRAFT

New Contract Structure

Geo beta with closely monitored KPIs

Global launch ($200k Fiksu + $200k NEKO)

- Prior to global launch, dev + FB agree to a internally generated revenue model supplied by biz ops
- This model will have revenue projections for the year

TRIGGER – if developer is within 15% of rev projections at DAY 30, then they get $600k NEKO. If not, we have the option of walking away.

ALL NEKO SPEND IS PUT INTO A BUDGET FOR ACTUAL

Hello James,

As I have mentioned to you yesterday, I am looking at the Identity space within lme's team, where Login is the #1 enabler.

We have reviewed this space to identify new opportunities as well as threats and came up with a master plan that I have also attached here – still tentative as it is heavily linked to PS12n.

I hope it gives you an idea of my current thinking for this vertical but also a few ideas of things that may be important for us to deliver to create an opportunity.

Let me know if this is useful,
konstantinos

Identity Apps

Context

- Apps that aggregate data on friends or contacts to provide contextually relevant summaries
- Link data from Facebook, Twitter, LinkedIn and G+ with Calendar info Contacts

- Apps that pull friends data (mainly photos) from Facebook to enrich contact lists on user's phone

Reputation

- Apps in the dating and/or recruitment space
- Develop a reputation score around the user based on data pulled from Facebook and other social networks

Calendar/Productivity

- Bday reminders, gifting apps or Horoscope Apps
- Link data from Facebook, Twitter, LinkedIn and G+ with Calendar info

Why do we care....

Data privacy

- Apps build experiences using private data that users have made available to Facebook with different privacy settings
- Control/prevent data leakages and set examples for the ecosystem
- Reduce PR and Policy risks

Overlap with Facebook Products

- Significant with our own Product roadmap that could compromise our success in those areas
- The apps come with good UIs but no new ideas - no real opportunity to find out about things that would be engaging and useful to use in the long term

No reciprocal data

- No value from the data they could provide even if they did

Data “leakage”...

Identity Data

- Sunrise (35K MAUs): 4,82M requests in 30 days – 138x
- Friendcaster for Android (334K MAUs): 131 M requests in 30 days – 392x
- Yahoo! (11.4M): 474M requests in 30 days – 42x
- IFTTT (170K MAUs): 365M requests in 30 days – 2,150x

User Feed

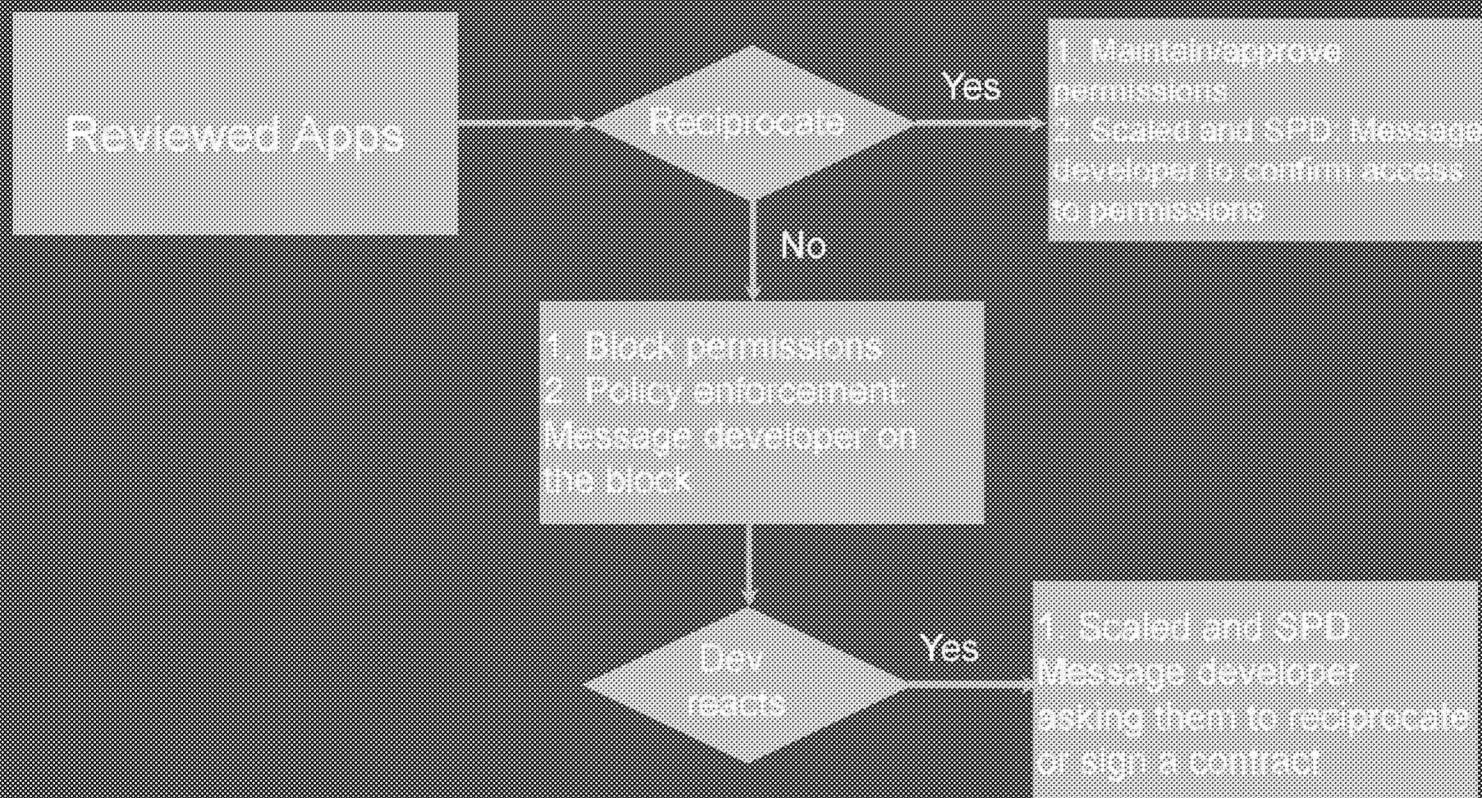

- MyLife.com (420K MAUs): 21.3M requests in 30 days – 51x
- Synch.me (1M MAUs): 985K requests in 30 days – 1x
- YouTube (8.5m MAUs): 1.1B requests in 30 days – 130x
- IFTTT (170K MAUs): 31M requests in 30 days – 182x

Friends List

- MyLife.com (420K MAUs): 10.6M requests in 30 days – 25x
- Contacts+ (265K MAUs): 5.6M requests in 30 days – 21x
- Bitly (245K MAUs): 1.6M requests in 30 days – 6.5x
- IFTTT (170K MAUs): 268K requests in 30 days – 1.6x

So.. what are we going to do?

Audit existing/future apps that fall under those verticals

Stakeholders: Product, Policy Enforcement, Partnerships, Comms

Plan & Timing

Audit: 2 weeks

- Query apps that request permissions in question
- Identify apps that fall under Context, Contacts and Reputation (top 500)

Communications to affected developers: 1 day

- Co-ordinate between Product/PMM and Comms on plan to notify all affected developers simultaneously
- Blog post and PR outreach if size of affected developers is significant

Monitoring: 4 - 12 weeks

- # of developers that react and request help with NEKO
- % of increase on NEKO spend from apps that have spent less than $ 250k earlier
- % of change on Developer NPS score

Open Questions

Do now or wait for Platform S12n?

- Do we need to go through this exercise now or can we wait till those permissions are deprecated for all in Jan?

Should we make NEKO spend a prerequisite for access to permissions?

- Are we at risk for alienating developers or creating a platform that favors the guys with the deep pockets?

As you outline, it seems like we need to:

1. Tighten our policies. I can work with Ali on the platform side. Brian, is there anyone we should loop in from the ads policy team or is Ali appropriate to run point?
2. Enforce aggressively. We can communicate concerns and enforcement actions through the appropriate partner managers depending on whether they are platform partners (e.g., Tripadvisor) or PMDs.

Boland + Osofsky + Purdy

It seems like you guys are the right people to figure this out across ads and platform (add anyone if needed). My sense is we should just massively tighten our language / explanation around uses of data for an on-site experience, make this type of stuff pretty explicitly verboten, and shut down anyone who seems to be skirting the line aggressively... how do we go about making sure this is true on a platform and ads side and then making sure all our partner touch points are in sync on this?

Agreed.

We already prohibit them (or other brokers/ad networks) from doing this directly.

We do need to be vigilant here, however, lots of 3rd party services are in the grey zone with regard to these scenarios.

Those on the "to" line, ahead of / even instead of any actual changes to the API we should think about / make sure we are in lock step on the policy side that this is NOT ok (or debate it if anyone thinks it is)

Here's Salesforce's (via Buddymedia) request:

Two things to understand though. First, this is all purely exploratory. We have not begun or committed to any of these types of databases in any way. Second, this is stuff that we'd love to do and as such is pretty strategic to Salesforce, so please keep this confidential.

Database:

- We'd like a database of every user who has ever posted on a branded page, commented on a page, or liked a comment. We'd like to make this database searchable by topic of posts (kept internally by us). We can already do most of this today without authentication given that it's all publicly available information via opengraph, but it's not completely clear whether facebook likes people doing this.
- We'd like to post messages on a wall that direct people to an in-tab experience or a dotcom experience powered by facebook. This experience may include a facebook authentication mechanism for identification. We'd like to add users identified through this mechanism to our database. In the process, we would likely cookie the users.
- As a tangent, we would like to cookie the users so that we can detect them on other experiences in-tab or on a dot-com without authentication and attribute that visit to the user's profile in our database. We'd also use this technique to identify the same user clicking a link in a tweet and thus connecting their facebook/twitter accounts.
- We'd like to do email users from a brands existing email database and direct them to an in-tab experience or a dotcom experience powered by facebook. This experience may also include a facebook authentication mechanism or may not. We would use this technique to try to link existing email properties to social profiles in our database.

How would we use this data?

- We'd like to mine authenticated users interests and friend graphs to build an aggregate model a brands customers/fans.
- We'd like to build a system that allows us to add social data to email lists so we can do social interest targeting through email

- We'd like use our cookies to identify users when they come to promotional content (in-tab or on dotcoms) to tailor content to the viewer.
- We'd like to use this data to augment internal CRM's like loyalty card members.
- We'd like to power all of this with salesforce CRM.

Lastly, I'd love to jump on a screenshare with you and show you a draft glimpse of the Marketing Cloud keynote demo that we'll be doing with Benioff on day one at Dreamforce. It doesn't necessarily address any of this just yet from a Facebook point of view, but I'd love to get your feedback.

The top line is that we consider Experian to be a data broker, and as such they fall under II.6 and must not collect any data from us (directly or indirectly).

Talked more with Experian and Oracle yesterday.

Tl;dr - our policies say that Platform data can only be used "to improve the application experience", but we don't have a good definition of what the boundaries on "application experience" are.

There are use-cases at the Platform policy level that we need to align ourselves on immediately.

- 1/ Using social data in emails to app users
- 2/ Using social data in off-line activities

Re 1/: Today, Spotify, Tripadvisor, and others ALREADY send emails using social data (what songs friends listened to, what locations you might be interested in based on interests). There are ~10 companies doing this today, yet our policy team regularly tells developers that it's not allowed.

Re 2/: Today, some PMDs enable event websites with Facebook login, and they attach Facebook Ids to event passes (or ski lift passes) to enable photos and OG activities to be synced to Facebook. Again, this stretches our traditional definition of what an 'application' is.

When those use-cases are added together, we're really at a point where the definition of "application experience" can be infinitely extended. Yet our policy team seems to view things more restrictively, and businesses aren't fully clear how our current policies are enforced.

Who are the right people to iron this out?

First – the RC group: <https://www.facebook.com/groups/rcatthebook/>

Attached is the proposal I was sent on what Experian wants to do. It's pretty thorough.

Here's what the follow-up convo has looked like (her answers are in bold):

Done – please arrive at the lobby for building 15.

I've reviewed the document that you attached (in classic second-try fashion), and have a few questions. Great document, by the way. I think it makes the use cases very clear.

Page 1:

Social attribution – is auth involved in this process? No, but it can be.

I assume you're wrapping our plugins in your own javascript – correct? Correct.

SMART Facebook connect – What Facebook data might be used when delivering messages to prospective customers? Is it PII? Are you planning on using PII or aggregate FB information in advertising in non-FB channels? How? When you say "other channels", it's a bit too ambiguous to evaluate. I think we'll need to get extremely specific on which use cases are OK or not OK – I doubt the team would be comfortable approving implementations that don't clearly define when information is gathered or exactly where it is used.

See below based on client examples. We can also discuss this more offline.

re: maximizing return on Facebook spend – the data will inform content in "other off-line channels" ...where? Again, I think non-specifics will scare the folks over here.

OK. If we could agree to email, website and POS we'd be happy.

In tv-client background, "merge this data with other sources" - is Facebook data being passed to other 3rd parties, either PII or aggregate? Are we talking about other data-brokers (besides Experian)?

Bottom line is that clients would like to be able to merge data gleaned from Apps with their larger customer databases to help build out a more complete profile of their users. This goes for all verticals – if we're saying FB data is interesting and that social data can help inform advertising, then clients want to see this data with their other data.

No third parties, ever. Just Experian, acting on behalf of the client.

In insurance background, "ages of users connected friends" & "use friend data" - Are users giving walloping amounts of permissions here? Regardless, my sense is that we'd be MUCH more restrictive of how friend data is used, regardless of the primary users' consent, when it comes to using friend data outside of improving the immediate experience of an app.

That is very helpful, thank you.

"as an example" - again, non-specifics will have to be eliminated.

In general, the insurance use-case is the 'scariest' and biggest PR risk, most likely.

We're aware and agree, but these are a lot of the clients who are most interested in social data.

In 2), regarding experian databases – is data gained on behalf of one client made available in any way (PII or aggregate) to other clients or companies?

Aggregate only for insights like for PR, whitepapers, etc. (not dissimilar to Comscore's recent study), we never share data between clients.

In general, using FB data to improve the user's experience within an application is explicitly allowed by policy already.

Thanks. I think the clarification we may be looking for here is exactly what is meant by "within the application."

Re 6) - Highly doubtful, and I'd recommend not broaching the topic until we've gone through 'safer' use cases for a while. Allowing Experian to build a cross-client database of Facebook user information would be the use case that our policies explicitly forbid today.

OK. I think we were a little unclear about this. We can talk about this offline.

PLATFORM FIX

Microsoft reported a large-scale spam problem on msn.com that was due to the Comments Plugin. Microsoft uses an India-based team to moderate comments. This team was unable to remove the spam because it was posted by malicious Pages that had geographically blacklisted India. Jonathan Gross mitigated this issue quickly without any product changes by using heuristics-based spam classifiers that automatically moderate comments posted by untrusted, geo-gated Pages. This graph shows the drop in spam reports on the Comments Plugin for comments that contain attack-themed keywords.

Plan to support Autopilot from Platform apps complete. Autopilot is a feature being launched by the privacy team that allows people to set a “favorite” audience that they share with, as opposed to “sticky” privacy that means that each post starts with the audience that you last posted to. For a better people experience, we would also like Platform apps to respect the “favorite” audience settings, so that people will know that sharing to Facebook works the same way, regardless of whether you are on newsfeed or on a 3rd party app. The Platform plan includes using the Autopilot setting to default publish permissions in Facebook Login and to set the default audience in Facebook sharing composers displayed by apps. In parallel, we are assessing the effect these changes could have on Canvas; early analysis points to negligible impact. Details here: Auto-pilot on Platform.

Developer reference docs for the Application node of the Graph API are now automatically generated.

In the past, we have updated API documentation manually, which is error prone and time consuming. The Application node represents a developer's configuration settings for their app in our system and is one of 3 major API nodes [along with User and Page] that are highly complex. This is a major milestone for the API + Dev Site team. These docs live here: <https://developers.facebook.com/docs/graph-api/reference/app>.

Launch of Hashed Friends API to 7 dating apps unblocks their migration to API v2. The Hashed Friends API helps make friend-of-friend connections between two people who use an app that are not connected by people who use the app. For example, let's say that Joanie and Chachi both use Tinder, but Richie does not. Joanie and Chachi are not friends, but Richie is friends with them both. The Hashed Friends API makes it possible for dating apps like Tinder, Coffee Meets Bagel, etc. to identify that Joanie and Chachi are friends-of-friends. When used with APIs launched in January, this completes our work to unblock a key cohort of widely used apps. Apps must apply to use either API.

== PAYMENTS ==

Launched a new PayPal flow on desktop. We've started testing at scale a new UI flow in which payers enter their PayPal username and password inline in the Facebook flow (vs. a paypal.com pop-up). FB is the first company to be granted permission to use the APIs that power this experience on desktop. Prior deployments have been limited to game consoles and other proprietary hardware. We will be testing for impact on payment conversion.

== COMMERCE ==

2x lift in conversion for users with credentials. The latest Buy on Facebook conversion metrics show that conversion rate for users with credentials on Facebook is 2x the conversion of users without credentials. The overall conversion rate for Buy on Facebook is currently at parity with both online-sales benchmark and A/B tests. With increased usage and with addition of credentials through other channels, we could meaningfully increase conversion rates for sellers through this feature.

Groups Commerce launches in the UK. We turned on the sell composer feature for over 26,000 For Sale groups in the UK. Early data shows that the adoption is likely to follow that of NZ, which has been successful.

== APP ADS & AUDIENCE NETWORK ==

App Ad client meetings to help drive roadmaps. Met Context Logic today (maker of Wish app, biggest spender last quarter) and we have a number of sessions coming up with head advertisers like Machine Zone and Supercell that will help inform our roadmap. Thanks to marketing and sales teams for setting these up and driving.

Audience Network CPM continues to perform below 10-20% below seasonal expectation. We are still investigating root causes, but the three most likely drivers are: (a) seasonal effects that may be magnified for AN (b) PQS (c) publisher mix shifts.

Uncovered and fixed several Power Editor scenarios in which the Audience Network was not defaulted “on” for eligible campaigns. These fixes shipped and should helping close the gap relative to other interfaces (PE adoption is 34% vs 80% for CF).

== GAMES ==

Great progress this week on partner integrations for App Invites. Diamond Dash is available in the App Store and will be launched to people next week. Shpock, a German Craigslist-like app, has submitted their iOS and Android apps for review this week and will release once they get approvals. Bumble, a Tinder rival, is also planning to submit today. We've also whitelisted several developers this week including Vivino, Goodreads, PicsArt and Pinterest. Both iOS and Android send and receive flows are ready for beta testing app invites. Engineering is focused on the remaining features for F8.

== FEATURED DEVELOPER ==

Developer: Zindagi Games

What they do: Zindagi Games is a Camarillo, CA-based gaming studio with a team of 80. Their latest title is a cross-platform Match 3 game that's live on iOS, Android and Canvas. Their previous titles, "Sports Champions I" and "Sports Champions II," were both bundled with Sony's PlayStation Move. And their last iOS game, 'Baseball Slam' was also built on Parse/FB and published by Zynga. The founder, Umrao Mayer, previously founded Kush Games which he sold to Sega.

Country: U.S.

How Facebook helps them: The app relies heavily on Parse for Core, Cloud Code & Long Running Jobs and now boasts ~720K Monthly Active People and is growing 20% MoM. The game leverages Facebook Login and other sharing tools. Zindagi's spend on Crazy Kitchen alone has ramped to over $17K/day and of course they're utilizing App Events (both custom and out-of-box) to improve the efficiency of their campaigns. The results show: the game has been in the top 250 downloaded Games for the past several months and peaked at 93.

== PEOPLE ==

* Great shout out in the Q&A this week for Gameranker being the "Fix of the Week." Shout outs to Wei Wu, Leif Foged, Parsa Bakhtary, Henry You, Jun Sun and the whole GameRanker taskforce for their awesome work to improve the Game playing experience!

* Our very own Jun Li, on the App Ads team, was recognized with a standing ovation at GMS with his stellar $130M bug fix. Well deserved and great to see this impact noticed in such manner!

Apologies, but I'm mass unsubscribing from my tasks. Please resubscribe me if I still need to be on it.

David Nichols: Oct 6, 2014 10:58am

That's fine with me, Chris. It's already a non-whitehat task, so if you want to strip off the #bug tag too, that's cool. I had totally missed the warning verbiage that Albert caught.

Chris Lang: Oct 6, 2014 10:34am

Per Albert's comments below, we are notifying people that this setting gets reset to the default, so this would be more of a feature request than a bug. Your call.

David Nichols: Oct 3, 2014 9:30am

Thanks, Albert. I didn't even read the pop-up window when turning platform on/off! My mistake!

Adam Gross: Oct 2, 2014 5:31pm

Thanks, I know it doesn't exist anymore, I wouldn't have figured Mobile Platform is the owner though :)

Sean Kinsey: Oct 2, 2014 5:30pm

They own all ui's related to auth. Api owns the infra.

Amy Hwang: Oct 2, 2014 5:28pm

oh, does mobile platform own <https://www.facebook.com/settings?tab=applications> ? I got to Jeffrey from phabricator blame for this particular notice.

Sean Kinsey: Oct 2, 2014 5:28pm

Adam, fyi - there is no more Platform UI Infrastructure team, the spoils has been divided between api, mobile platform and devx.

Sean Kinsey: Oct 2, 2014 5:27pm

Amy, this should go to the Mobile Platform team

Amy Hwang: Oct 2, 2014 5:23pm

Jeffrey, is this also something that you would look into?

Albert Hong: Oct 2, 2014 4:13pm

We properly notify you that the "Apps Others Use" will be reset to their defaults (see 'Notice' screenshot). Not a privacy violation, but this does seem undesirable / I feel like this is a product call; there may be a good reason the Platform team does this.

Adam Gross: Oct 2, 2014 2:19pm

Steven or Amy - do you know who would own this?

Adam Gross: Oct 2, 2014 2:19pm

Hmm this isn't a Production Engineering (infra) issue. I'd be inclined to think Platform UI Infrastructure. Sean can you help route this to the owner of the App Settings page?

Yes, apps can keep info they're allowed to read updated. What app is this?

Connie Yang

7:12pm Apr 16

Eddie the app had my correct info (the actual public/friends data) and some time after I added the fake jobs, it pulled in that data. I don't know when, I didn't know it had happened until some one mentioned it.

Eddie O'Neil

7:08pm Apr 16

Ryan: we've talked about doing exactly that. If it worked that way, we trade this issue for a new one - people asking "where's my photo/etc".

Neither experience is great for people, and both rely on developers doing something reasonable.

In Connie's case, the experience was poor.

In Tinder's case, the experience of letting people explicitly choose to widen the audience of Only Me or Friends photos to everyone using the app is pretty good.

Connie, what do you mean the app was auto-updating profiles?

['Only me' Profile info leakage via platform]

Apps on platform can automatically pull 'Only Me' info from profiles and displays it to both you and other people using that app.

How I found out: I have a lot of 'Only Me' jobs that I use for testing, and I found out that apps that I had previously auth-ed were automatically updating profiles with that data, and I cannot control the display of it.

While "whoa how did you start working at Casterly Rock" is a fun opener, isn't this directly violating what we tell users is 'Only Me'?

Yeah, we need to make clearer that this GDP setting impacts privacy on Facebook and not necessarily in the app. There is no way apps can keep up with our privacy model and we are asking for trouble if we ask them to try. They should figure out what makes sense for their app and clearly communicate this to users.

If you hit the endpoint `graph.facebook.com/<vanity>/music.listens` with an `access_token` that is a friend, you should get back only the listens that are available to the friend. They can use this to filter stories.

Eddie O'Neil

10:26am Oct 5

Sure -- some folks will configure an "only me" ceiling in those apps which will affect how their activity is visible to their friends on Facebook.

Right now, I think that's orthogonal with trying to keep an App in sync with the privacy of actions on Facebook.

Ian Wilkes

10:23am Oct 5

Eddie I imagine there will be a fair number of people who want the Only Me setting in these social apps so they can lurk - get the input from their friends w/o giving back. It's not awesome for the ecosystem, but might be a good use case to support as people get used to all this sharing.

But I agree with you that apps aren't going to succeed at staying in sync w/ our privacy control.

Eddie O'Neil

8:45am Oct 5

The privacy setting in GDP is a ceiling that sets the maximum level that an application can publish, and it controls who can see activity from an app on Facebook.

Charles Dowd

8:00am Oct 5

Shouldn't we apply the sharing rules of the GDP on top of the rules set in the app (and intersection). The expectation of the user would be to have this sharing ability of an app controlled at the level accepted. Like a dating app, for instance?

Otherwise we should remove the private drop down at the GDP as it means nothing. If I change the sharing rules for an app, that should change the custom sharing for all individual posts. Did I misunderstand the purpose of the privacy setting on the GDP?

View All Comments

Some partners are querying privacy settings.

If I use The Guardian's app, in the GDP I can set my reads to be visible to only me. However, the app can't see this setting and makes my reads visible to my other friends who use the app within the app's UI.

They're getting complaints about this - users expect the privacy setting they set in the GDP to be respected in the app.

Do we plan to make an action's privacy settings visible via the API?
How should partners deal with this case?

Importance: Low

Also, as a philosophical point, I think we should back down on a promise of “parity.”

I think our priority should be to help users share information as efficiently as possible. If we can make information sharing more efficient in our own applications because we don’t have to worry about developer abuse, I think we need to be free to do that.

We should strive to make the platform as powerful as possible, but not at the expense of helping users share information within our own apps.

+Peter/Ari and Wiseman/Eric to confirm the details

Hadi has a right to be mad. When we launched FB95, we had communicated that all FB apps will eventually use feed forms. We talked about NF parity in 2006 but over time have gone back on that goal and have not been as open in our communication that Platform apps will not have parity with FB apps. I don’t particularly think FB’s decision is wrong, FB apps are internal apps, it’s easier to trust and monitor them for quality.

The Nile will solve most of Hadi’s concerns. Tagged stories will no longer appear in the stream which is the main column on the homepage. Only stories published via the composer, feed forms or ones that users have explicitly subscribed to will appear in the stream. We should start external communication on Nile as soon as possible to alleviate all these concerns and give developers time to adjust to the new concepts.

My assumption is that when the Nile launches only those FB app stories that are published via the composer or feed form will appear in the stream.

Ari/Peter/Josh/Eric please confirm.

Thanks,
-Ruchi

You may have heard/know this already.

Interesting note on how we favor our own apps over platform apps. If you can't get past Hadi's angry parts, this is the main gist:

One thing about this that is beyond what other "apps" can do is that the tagged recipient automatically gets a story on their profile: "Joe tagged Sally in a note".

For a regular Platform app it would be a very painful thing to "tag" 25 people and publish anything to 25 people's newsfeeds. Whereas Facebook's own "Notes" application is far more prolific this way. I've been tagged in dozens of notes by friends, and none of these notes have anything to do with me, but all the stories (and the comments about them) show up in my newsfeed without my choice in the matter.

Ethan, since Sandra is oof and has usually been the contact for this stuff, I wanted to send it to you as well.

Since the summer, we've had a dialogue about "why can't apps - at least 'great apps' - get parity with FB on ability to publish to feed"

Back in July, we were told that the goal was for all apps to use the same feed-form to publish short stories on behalf of users. This hasn't happened across the board. Since June we've asked for the ability to publish editorially selected "short stories" automatically (without user approval), in the same way that Facebook does in some cases.

The case below is really an example where Facebook's own "Notes" app is playing by different rules than other apps, and it results in user-spam. People can tag each other in spammy notes, this tagging is totally unrelated to the contents of the Note, and since tags automatically send notifications and publish to the newsfeed of every friend who is tagged, they spread quite virally.

I think you guys should question whether your own Notes app is more or less spammy than the bar you are holding Platform apps to. If a user of iLike tags 5 friends as going to a concert with them, it would require a 10-click confirmation flow to publish that story to all 5 friends' newsfeeds. On FB Notes, it's a zero-click (no confirmation needed, automatically publishes). This doesn't seem right to us, and seems especially counter to the original philosophy of "Great Apps", whereby the philosophy of newsfeed parity was very specifically agreed to by Facebook.

Subject: Tagging friends in notes, photos

btw, as I'm sure you know, tagging friends in notes has recently become a very popular activity (25 things you don't know about me)

One thing about this that is beyond what other "apps" can do is that the tagged recipient automatically gets a story on their profile: "Joe tagged Sally in a note".

For a regular Platform app it would be a very painful thing to "tag" 25 people and publish anything to 25 people's newsfeeds. Whereas Facebook's own "Notes" application is far more prolific this way. I've been tagged in dozens of notes by friends, and none of these notes have anything to do with me, but all the stories (and the comments about them) show up in my newsfeed without my choice in the matter.

Are you guys gonna do anything to reduce the spamminess of tagging friends in Notes? This is clearly less of a "utility" than Photos, it's just spam, people tag friends in notes simply to pass it along

If not, then how can apps do the same thing? If Joe tags Sally as going to a concert together, why can't we automatically publish that to Sally's profile? It's certainly more relevant and more useful than many of the "notes" I've been tagged in.

I guess this is mainly about platform and app parity. In the summer, the goal was for feed-publishing parity with default apps. I understand why tagging in photos would always stay unique, because it's such a core, central part of Facebook. But tagging in Notes is not only un-core, it's become a nuisance to see random Notes where friends are tagged in them for no reason than to pass it along.

Are you guys gonna do anything abt this?

here's a clear example of why your own users think this is spam

 Kevin Colleran is starting a new Facebook chain letter where people will need to write 25 random facts about themselves... it is 1 better than the current chain letter!    Comment

Primarily we think it will be a list of the usual suspects from past policy enforcements. We'd love to pull from your historic knowledge on the topic. Is there anybody you'd add to the list below? We're going to build plans around how we manage and communicate with each of these developers. There are also comms plans in the works for working with developers who are high ad spenders and friends of Mark/Sheryl.

Subject: Hunch / people recommendations

I've been thinking a lot about Tinder and other people recommendation apps since about 10% of people in many countries are using a Tinder now. People recommendations seems like something that should be right up our alley, but it's currently something we're not very good at. Tinder's growth is especially alarming to me because their product is built completely on Facebook data, and it's much better than anything we've built for recommendations using the same corpus.

We're focusing a lot within search on finding specific people, and we're focusing a lot on mapping out all of the world's media and places for recommendations -- but we haven't focused much on people recommendations at all. If you do a dating or recruiting type query, it really shows. The results just aren't relevant yet. If you do a query once, you won't want to do it again.

I think this is a big and important space and it's something we should have a team working on -- probably to develop people recommendation Hunch sections for now. A group was very excited about building a dating standalone app but I didn't find anything they were doing to be particularly differentiated yet. This team might be a good place to start in building this effort.

Related, I'm also curious to review what sections we're currently developing for Hunch soon. Whenever we discuss this, we always use examples like places and movies, but given our strengths with people it seems like we should have some prominent sections on helping you connect and discover people -- both ones you already know who are nearby, and probably a different module for people you don't know yet but should meet. This could end up being the most valuable section in Hunch for a lot of people.

Hey Adam, I can confirm those calls are all are also all failing for valid privacy reasons.

The root cause here is that given you're making these calls in realtime, the privacy checks are being actively checked – rather than you relying on the cached version of the graph you have in your DB.

In this case, one of these subject users has opted out of platform, and three have deactivated their FB accounts. This means that if you attempted to make API calls with a token belonging to each of these subject users, those calls would also all fail.

I hope this makes sense.

This is actually by design. For users who login to an app via v2.0, that user is in a v2.0 state regardless of the API version you call – hence all friends are not available for that user when calling v1 or v2. The fact the user logged into the app via v2.x is a signal that the app is expecting v2.x behavior everywhere. Specifically, we added this to prevent apps having users login to v2 with all its promised of how protecting friends information works, then those apps making v1 calls on the server to side-step that expectation.

This will be the state of all users come 4/30, so it makes sense to start handling this case now.

Thanks Konstantinos. Simon, could you please answer both questions? Getting all friends via the 1.0 API with a 2.0 token was the crux of our migration plan, so that we could continue to get mutual friends between new users who signed up via 2.0 and old users who hadn't reauthenticated until most people upgrade. The "Unsupported get request" issue is preventing us from migrating at all.

Thanks,

I believe you can call v2 with an access token acquired against v1 without any problems; but I don't believe you should expect to get back the complete friends list with an access token obtained against the v2 of the API. I would consider this a bug if it was possible to be honest.

But like I said, I would rather ask Simon to keep me honest here.

Hi Konstantinos,

The appsecret_proof seems to have done the trick, thank you again. Interesting that we didn't get the standard OAuth "(#100) This method must be called with appsecret_proof." Exception with this as we've seen in other cases though.

We are also experiencing two new issues which I hope you could help us with.

1. With the all_mutual_friends API, about half the time requests are returned as:

```
{"error": {"message": "Unsupported get request. Please read the Graph API documentation at https://developers.facebook.com/docs/graph-api", "type": "GraphMethodException", "code": 100}}

As here:

https://graph.facebook.com/v2.0/641975429?fields=context.fields\(all_mutual_friends.limit\(10000\)\)&access_token=CAAD4bKUPbR8BAE1ZCPz2rr3EMZC3ZBmxRZA92AnBZA4v2qzOtC26QjmEL89sLOoZBmMMNiUzC57iF4CHrIRT7rPEKDa9vpQyDaA7FwsTNgjxbPgduBwegR8TPMhFJI7g9OZATYjIPd7U2UDiFgprZBG9a7O1tSrONTIPugLgVNQXr1RZBpP0kbYqKJ07U8AR5HZCk4ieSdLZBQ6vcpiobJ9VPjVb&appsecret_proof=4795f51094cd30d63c11cb4492362d0a92b9164e9f8704e6712f541c75926ec7)&access_token=CAAD4bKUPbR8BAE1ZCPz2rr3EMZC3ZBmxRZA92AnBZA4v2qzOtC26QjmEL89sLOoZBmMMNiUzC57iF4CHrIRT7rPEKDa9vpQyDaA7FwsTNgjxbPgduBwegR8TPMhFJI7g9OZATYjIPd7U2UDiFgprZBG9a7O1tSrONTIPugLgVNQXr1RZBpP0kbYqKJ07U8AR5HZCk4ieSdLZBQ6vcpiobJ9VPjVb&appsecret_proof=4795f51094cd30d63c11cb4492362d0a92b9164e9f8704e6712f541c75926ec7)

2. With the /me/friends/ API, we're seeing inconsistencies in what returns all friends vs. only app user friends between our regular users, users with FB developer accounts for our app, and the FB "Test Users" (under Roles) for our app. Take for example a call to v1.0/me/friends with an access token generated in v2.0:

My account (developer) - 788370643:
All friends returned, as expected.

My CMB testing account - 100006514429166:
Response is from v2.0 instead of v1.0, with only 1 friend out of 3 returned despite all 3 being CMB app users.

An Facebook Test User - 1382602362059924:
Only the 5 CMB app users returned of 15 total friends.

I was wondering if there's restrictions for calling v1.0 endpoints like /me/friends/ with an access token generated from v2.0, or vice versa? Is the access token version specific?

Hopefully you can point out anything that we're doing wrong here and let us know how we can get these working as expected.

Many thanks,

Barney

Hi guys,

Thanks for the help last time. Unfortunately we've come across another potential issue after we started to use the new APIs in production this afternoon:

The "All Mutual Friends API" is returning no (or fewer) results at least half the time when called between two users. We have several examples where when logged in as User A on facebook looking at mutual friends with user B we see multiple other users, but a query in the graph explorer or through the All Mutual Friends API does not return these same users. E.g.:

For two of our staff, uids 602692 and 1473780004, who are not friends on Facebook we know that they do have 4 mutual friends (who are also all staff). However a call to `/v2.2/1473780004?fields=context.fields(all_mutual_friends)` with an access token for 602692 only returns `{"id": "1473780004"}`.

Has anything changed here at all? Is there a case when the API would not return the mutual friends between two users even though there are mutual friends?

Thanks,

Barney

Hey Barney - as the error says you need to call this with an appsecret proof.

You can construct this by making a sha1_sum of your app secret and the user token.

I'm on mobile so can't link to the docs, but a google will find it on our site.

Hello Adam,

As promised... We have now approval from our internal stakeholders to move ahead with a new API – working name Hashed Anon All Friends API. The new API as well as the relevant docs will be ready next week.

How would this API work... For each of the FB logged in users, the API will return:

FBIDs: App friends that logged in before your migration to V2:

App Scoped IDs: App friends that logged in after your migration to V2:

Anonymous one-way hashed IDs: Non-app friends

This API will hopefully let you understand some of the structure of the graph in order to determine which non-app friends to recommend to a given user, and thus which pairs of users to call the All Mutual Friends API on behalf of. These hashed IDs will be in an entirely new namespace (i.e. Different to anything you have today). its purely for matching 2nd and 3rd order mutual friends etc.

The following example may help...

<5556ECED-310D-43CA-BFC4-C324D0C17985.png>

For u1, we'd emit hashed IDs for: u8, u5, u4 & app scoped ID for u3

For u2, we'd emit hashed IDs for: u6 , u4 & app scoped ID for u3 and u7

For u7, we'd emit hashed IDs for: u5 & app scoped ID for u2

Thus, the app could determine that u1 and u2 are related:

- * via u3 (2nd order via app-user)

- * via u4 (2nd order via non-app user)

- * u5 and u7 (3rd order).

Note, the relationship via u6 would not be known as u6 is not friends with ≥ 2 app-users.

Based on the above, the number of API calls you will need to make against the Mutual Friends API will be drastically reduced as well, which has been a concern of yours as well.

Let me know if that would work.

We're working on spec'ing and building it out now - hope to have an update for you next week.

Note, you'll need to use this indexing api and the All Mutual Friends api in concert, so it might make sense to begin integrating that now in any place you'd want to surface mutual friends between two people in your UI.

Thanks for the reminder, the Mutual Friends API is now available for you to use. Your app ID has already been whitelisted, but please do let us know once you start your integration as we would like to verify how you are using it.

Some more info on the API.

1/ API

Endpoint: graph.facebook.com/v2.2/USER_B_ID?fields=name,id,context.fields\(all_mutual_friends\)&access_token=USER_A_TOKEN&access_token=USER_A_TOKEN) – where both user A and B must be app users

Note that this API is available in v2.0, v2.1 and v2.2, but not v1.0. By default it returns a total count, and up to 5 mutual friends. If you want more mutual friends, you can specify a limit param:
...?fields=name,id,context.fields(all_mutual_friends.limit(200))

2/ Sample response:

NOTE: we only return the ID field if the mutual friend is an app user. We return a token in all cases. The token will eventually be usable to redirect the user to the FB profile for that person i.e. www.facebook.com/<TOKEN> but that's not done yet.

Hello Adam,

Good feedback. We are exploring the development of an API that would solve the issue with the number of calls. More on this in the coming days...

For non-app friends the Mutual API will return the name and picture. I think the distinction we made below is related to the scenario a mutual friend is an app user (the API will return ID) Vs a non-app user (the API will return the token).

I made a note for the two additional IDs.

Thanks a lot,
konstantinos

IMO, in light of the path fiasco, allowing the default values for the perms in this bundle to be tweak able when the user enters credentials in the device may be something to consider, especially since we don't get a chance to correct this once the device has shipped.

Regardless of that decision would it make sense to have a setting that turns off SSO for apps while still having the device connected to FB so that the user can post photos/statuses etc from the device?

Thanks

I think we decided that the app would still specify GDP permissions, and the See More link would state what the app was actually asking for. What I mean is that if you only ask for these permissions you're still eligible for fast/native GDP.

I don't think users can tweak this.

Subject: Re: Permissions on iOS

I can't figure out how to use Zoho docs.

My comments:

Initial Sign-On – Apple will design this experience. I assume it will be good. We need to give them legalese here. Not worried beyond getting them the right legalese we need for GDP.

Reading Profile

- We should ask someone maybe from content strategy to suggest a short sentence here. I think something like "Allow Foodspotting to access my Facebook account" feels right here.
- I think we're going to ask them for a "See More" link, right? We should include that here and say it will link to a Facebook page explaining the permissions in detail. We can't make the "Don't Allow" button a See More link.
- Otherwise, I think these permissions seem reasonable. The ones that are "close to the line" for me are:
 - user_photos
 - user_videos
 - user_checkins
 - user_events
 - user_groups
- (I think they're ok, but they are the most aggressive.)
- Why wouldn't we include user_online_presence in this? It's not that scary.
- I think we should allow some friends_* permissions here. It seems strange to have a social platform and not allow some friends_ permissions. Personally, I think we should make this include:
 - friends_about_me
 - friends_activities
 - friends_birthday
 - friends_education_history
 - friends_hometown
 - friends_interests
 - friends_likes
 - friends_location
 - friends_relationships
 - friends_website
 - friends_work_history
- (My litmus test here is that we should allow the basic profile/identity data that you'd expect to see in a Facebook contact card. We should certainly include any data that will just show up in the Address Book. We shouldn't create disincentives to use our API over the Address Book.)

Publishing

- Again, we should work w/ branding or content strategy to figure our right wording here. I think it's something like "Allow Foodspotting to publish to Facebook" or something.
- If we do a "combined" permission, I might say "Allow Foodspotting to access and publish to my Facebook account."
- This should only grant publish_actions. We're making it so publish_actions allow non-wall-to-wall posts.

Subject: Permissions on iOS

All — there are four permission / GDP scenarios on iOS:

- 1/ initial sign-on from the device
- 2/ 3rd party app reading from a user's profile
- 3/ 3rd party app writing to a user's profile
- 4/ 3rd party app requesting additional permissions

There's a doc here: <https://docs.fb.com/opendoc.do?docId=16078000000013001&service=zw> that covers these.

I'm sure this will come up in the review tomorrow, so please have a look over the doc and send along feedback. Apple is anxious to hear this proposal, so I'd like to the review / privacy / legal cycle started.

Eddie

What they have in mind after the conversation is that they will implement a single blue alert which displays a sentence per permission. That way an alert would scroll if you ask for a few permissions - this is what they initially wanted but we pushed them off that because it was just like our old scary GDP design. They expect to get the text from us. In their mind they they could have a very consistent experience without permissions bundles by just treating all permissions and scenarios the same. We need to consider if we are happy with that UI experience (I don't have the full context) and what adjustments we want them to make.

Subject: Re: Shipping API improvements on Aug 29th

Hi Jen – the API improvements include:

1/ adding "field expansion" to the Graph API. This makes it easier for developers to read properties from objects and connections in the graph. For example, developers building mobile apps can read properties from a user, their friends, and their friends' photo albums in a single request to the Graph API. This makes it much easier for developers to get exactly the data they need for their mobile apps.

2/ new features in the Graph API Explorer <https://developers.facebook.com/tools/explorer> to support building Graph API queries Vlad, are there other features – paging? - that would be included here?

To launch these, we should follow the usual launch process and:

- 1/ put this on the launch calendar
- 2/ review with Doug + Mike
- 3/ assign a PMM to help shepherd it out the door. [Note, from what I understand, the PMM team is under water right now.]
- 4/ review with privacy + legal. I agree that this will be a no-op, but we should do this step.
- 5/ write a post for the developer blog
- 6/ write developer doc for field expansion and for its tooling

Sound good?

Thanks,
Eddie

Hi Jonny, Tera,

Here's a quick update on Platform budget. As of end of day Monday, February 17th, we came in under budget: 40% through budget and 53% through the month.

See below for this week's annotated OC highlights, plus a summary of our priorities this week and last that are not included in the press activities recap. Let us know if you have any questions.

Thanks,
Claudia

February 2014 – Platform Activities & Budget

	Billing to-date	Monthly forecast
Proactive	$10,536.25	$36,000
Other (News, Inbound, Reporting)	$6,626.25	$6,000

Speaking	$648.75	$3,000
Total	$17,811.25	$45,000

OC Platform PROACTIVE Priorities this week and last:

- WSJ Playlist: Secured Ime for profile opportunity; shared briefing materials and staffed interview today, 2/19
- Collections Data: Secured initial interest with USA Today for larger pop culture story leading with Collections data; OC shared screen shots
- Monetization PR plan: Participated in brainstorm and compiled plan, including objectives, speaking opportunities and relationship building meetings; as part of plan, submitting Stephanie and Sriram for speaking slots at VentureBeat's Mobile Summit
- Inc. 30 Under 30: OC compiled nomination for Ilya; awaiting feedback
- Tech Review Innovators Under 35: Identified opportunity for James and shared information; decided to pass given level of effort involved in submission
- Startup Grind: Shared information on potential interview and networking opportunity for Ilya or Eddie
- Press:Here: Identified broadcast opportunity for Deb or Ime; gathering additional information to propose to Press:Here producers

OC Platform OTHER Priorities this week and last:

- f8: Compiling recommended targets for pre-briefs and f8 invites, based on Platform Simplification lists
- SXSW 2014: Shared press list and facilitating prep call for the "Come On, Get Appy" panel secured; OC to assist with press invites this week
- Developer Week: Participated in keynote prep meeting with Bryan Klimpt; secured interest in Bolts story with The Next Web, Ken Yeung which is slated to appear later this week
- Speaking Opps 2014: Reviewed list of priority spokespeople and identified/researched relevant speaking opportunities in 2014; reviewing list with Eliza this week

Facebook Courts Developers with New Approach to Platform

The Information//Eric Newcomer

When Facebook convenes its first developer conference in three years later this month, the social networking giant will be aiming to draw software makers closer to its booming mobile business—and convince them that it has learned from its often-troubled efforts to serve as a platform for third-party developers.

Facebook's new approach to partnerships stresses ever-improving tools that allow software developers—especially those building mobile applications—to tap into the company's identity services and much-touted "social graf." By having people log-in via Facebook and allow access to their Facebook profiles, software makers can learn a lot about customers' friends and interests and improve their offerings accordingly.

Ilya Sukhar, founder of an app-services provider called Parse that was acquired by Facebook last year, was a key organizer of the upcoming event, signaling the importance the company attaches to the mobile analytics and notification tools that Parse provides. Some developers expect the company to announce deeper integration of Parse into Facebook's own products for developers, such as its payments system and its advertising services.

Facebook's platform goals are in some respects more modest than they were five or seven years ago, when many game developers and others leaped at the chance to build products and businesses that were fully integrated into Facebook. The social network had positioned itself as a universe unto itself that had everything a third-party developer needed to build a business. Most importantly, it offered the chance to attract customers quickly and cheaply through automated notifications and invitations to friends.

Facebook-centric companies such as social gaming firm Zynga enjoyed exponential growth for a time. But Facebook ultimately left many partners feeling burned when it changed its algorithms to cut down on social spam and all but eviscerated many third-party apps in the process.

Now Facebook aims to be less an all-encompassing Web environment than a vendor of unique tools and advertising services, especially for the mobile world. With 53% of its ad revenue now coming from mobile, Facebook needs close relationships with mobile app developers. But without a mobile phone operating system of its own, Facebook has to earn those relationships with more than a promise of a large audience.

Game-makers and other mobile app developers are already among Facebook's best mobile advertising customers. Facebook in turn has become a critical vehicle for getting people to install news apps on their phones—and use them regularly.

The Power of Login

Facebook has said little about what new products or services might debut at F8, which will feature a keynote from CEO Mark Zuckerberg and about 20 sessions, including tracks on building, growing and monetizing apps. But developers are clear on what they see as the priorities.

One key item is Facebook Login, which can be used to connect apps to data and personal information on the Facebook platform. It's the tool that enables the Nike+ Running app to send information on a customer's athletic accomplishments to their Facebook feed, for example, or lets patrons of Goodreads share what books they've read. Of the top 100 grossing iPhone applications in the U.S., 81 offer Facebook Login, according to Facebook. (On Android it's 62 out of 100.)

But even though Facebook Login provides more information about customers than similar services offered by Twitter and Google, developers say that many people are reluctant to log in with Facebook's tool because they worry that the apps will post directly to their feeds or otherwise interact with their Facebook friends in unpredictable ways.

That can be a problem for app developers, many of whom prefer that people use Facebook Login because Facebook ad campaigns work much better when they do.

Now Facebook aims to be less an all-encompassing Web environment than a vendor of unique tools and advertising services, especially for the mobile world.

A Facebook spokeswoman said the company has already made moves to improve the percentage of app users who log in using Facebook's tool.

"In 2013, we started requiring apps to ask permission before posting on behalf of people back to Facebook," a Facebook spokeswoman wrote in an email. "By splitting this authorization process into two distinct pieces, we aimed to tackle the problem of social spam and surprise that came from people not understanding they were agreeing to share back to Facebook."

Parse is will also be a big topic. The service lets app developers send notifications to their users urging them to keep using their application, for example. Parse also offers to tools that let developers save data in the cloud, integrate third party login tools to their apps and analyze their users behavior.

App developers are expecting a lot of discussion of advertising as well. Facebook mobile ads have proven very effective for driving app downloads in particular, but the most desirable inventory is scarce as app-makers chase the same small set of money-spending customers.

"I think they're going to talk a lot about their ad network that they're going to be developing," says Chris DeWolfe, CEO of SGN, though he doesn't have an inside view on the company's thinking.

Right now, Facebook sells ads only inside its own Facebook feed, but with an ad network it would also place targeted ads on third-party sites using its own trove of data and identity tools. A company spokeswoman declined to comment on the ad network plans.

Some Still Cautious

While app developers say they're encouraged by the tools Facebook has been building, many remain mindful of the company's history and are wary of integrating too closely with Facebook.

"We wasted so many cycles—hundreds of thousands of dollars—chasing Facebook's distribution model," says Matt Mahan, CEO of Causes. "It's been six very painful years."

Causes is now focusing on its own Website after launching with Facebook's platform in 2007 and spending years trying to make Facebook it's primary hub for doing business. Indeed, Causes was among the last to make such a move: Facebook's platform on the web is a shadow of what it once was. Many apps simply refer people to their company's website. Games dominate, and represent the vast majority of applications that are located within the company's website.

One test of whether Facebook has truly turned over a new leaf with developers may lie in how the company handles its own emerging emerging hodge-podge of standalone apps. The company recently launched Paper and Messenger, for example, but developers don't yet know whether they will be invited to integrate with those apps in some fashion or even show their ads there.

However it plays out, though, the days of the Facebook being a make-or-break platform for developers are over.

"There's not a lot Facebook could do to cause problems for us," says Ryan Matzner, a director at the mobile app developer Fueled.

Forget Dating Sites, Try Facebook Instead To Find the One TIME//Alice Park

Not only are more people meeting on social networks, but their relationships were happier than those that began offline in more traditional ways.

Online dating can be so stressful – filling out the profile and keeping up with all the interactions can feel like a job – so it's no surprise that sometimes digital romance blooms under more Facebook friend-ly circumstances.

Jeffrey Hall, associate professor of Communication Studies at University of Kansas, was surprised to learn that 7% of people who married after meeting online had met for the first time on social networking sites like Facebook, MySpace and ClassMates – not matchmaking chat rooms, or online dating sites or via other romance-centric cyber connections.

"It was really, really astonishing, since [romantic relationships] aren't the purpose of these sites," he says of the data, which came from eHarmony, the online dating service.

Hall decided to investigate the connection, and learn more about who was meeting their significant other this way, and how well these marriages fared. The sample included 19,131 participants who had been married once between 2005 and 2012, and were asked where they met – was it online dating sites; email or instant messaging; online communities such as chat rooms or virtual reality games; or social networking sites.

Those who met on social networking sites were more likely to be younger, married more recently, and African American compared to those who met on other ways on the internet.

And when the participants were compared on marital satisfaction, the partners who met via social networking reported being just as happy as those who were introduced on online dating sites, which tout their compatibility benefits, and more satisfied than those who met on online communities, which nurture conversations among people with similar interests and beliefs. What surprised Hall even more, however, was that the social networking-based relationships were happier than those that began offline, in traditional ways such as being introduced by mutual friends.

"I was surprised by a lot of these results," he says. "I think that social networking is the digital version of being introduced by friends." For most of the 20th century, friend-based introductions were the primary way people met their spouse, he says, and social networks may simply be an extension of that pattern.

That could also explain why marriages that began on social networking sites were also no more likely to end in divorce than unions that were generated by online dating sites that involve algorithms and strangers trying to match people together, rather than acquaintances who know their friends' likes and dislikes and personality best.

Social networking sites also have another potential advantage over dating services – they aren't burdened by the pressure of trying to find love and the anxiety of having to present yourself in the best possible light to catch a mate. While there's no truth filter on sites like Facebook, and there is certainly some amount of self-promotion and exaggeration, having your circle of friends visit your page can keep you pretty honest, which means by and large, your social network version of you is relatively close to the real thing – at least that's what the studies show.

The result? Conversations, observations and interactions on social networking sites may be more casual and low risk, relieved of the pressure and anticipation of a potential date (or rejection for a potential date) that shadow every picture, message and response on dating sites. "In part, social networking sites provide a low risk, high reward place to meet people," says Hall. "It's a good place to do some investigating and a good place to learn about people that doesn't carry the self-presentational weight of creating an online dating profile."

The fact that most of the marriages were among African-Americans could reflect the fact that at the time the data were collected, between 2005 and 2012, African-Americans and Latinos were over-represented on social networking sites compared to their proportions in the general population. For these groups, he says, such sites may have been a way to expand their already close-knit network of friends to include others like them, but not yet part of their local connections.

Of course, the data may also reflect more early social networking behavior than the way that people use the sites today. While it dominated the early days of cyber connecting, for example, MySpace was surpassed by Facebook in 2008 as the primary source of online interactions. And the rising age of Facebook users may also have an effect on the patterns that Hall found. While it's possible that people who meet and marry via social networking sites may always be from a young demographic, it's also possible that as more people join the site, including those who are looking for a second chance at love later in life, could drive that average age up.

What the results do show is that we shouldn't be so quick to dismiss social networks as an important tool for finding love in the 21st century. According to a Pew Research Center Internet Project poll, in 2013, 24% of internet users have flirted with someone online, compared to 15% in 2005. And Hall's findings suggest that those flirtations, if they're on social networking sites, are increasingly likely to lead to meaningful relationships, and even happy marriages.

Facebook Wants to Turn 25 Million Small Businesses Into Advertisers Ad Age//Cotton Delo

After years of courting the nation's biggest advertisers, Facebook is going after the 99%. That figure represents the long tail of advertisers; the plumbers and dentists, restaurants and political candidates, app developers and direct-response advertisers. These small and mid-sized businesses don't have Facebook account reps and are left to figure out Facebook advertising for themselves.

It's an operational challenge for the social network, which has invested heavily to educate big brands and agencies about its products. To tackle the long tail, it won't build out a large customer-service teams like YP or Gannett, which specialize in local sales. The idea is to make the product intuitive and steer Facebook page administrators to "boost" posts that are performing well with some ad spend through notifications on their page.

"All the traditional things people think about -- like a sales channel through YP or a call center -- they're all good, but we're dealing with a scale that's really unprecedented," said Dan Levy, Facebook's director of small business. "And trying to figure out how you unlock that is intellectually fun but really hard."

Mr. Levy's team has doubled since he took on the role in July 2012. (It's in the "hundreds" across a few offices, including a call center in Austin.) It's recently started to do outreach to customers whose ads are under-performing -- a departure from its past strategy of just responding to people who've flagged an issue.

But there are only so many small and medium-sized businesses Facebook can talk to. From insights it gleans during those calls, it will get better at simplifying the ad-buying experience for a broad swath, according to Mr. Levy.

"In an ideal world, I don't have to call [someone]. I can do that marketing on Facebook," he said. "But until we've figured it out, that's what we're going to do. It's a lot of prototyping until we can build stuff into the product."

Facebook is borrowing from its big brand and agency strategy in one respect. It's formed an SMB Council comprised of 12 businesses, a structure that's reminiscent of its Client Council that includes chief marketers from P&G, Coke, Walmart and Unilever among its members. With both groups, Facebook solicits feedback on how its products can be improved. (For the big spenders, it also gives a peek at what's on the product roadmap.)

The SMB Council convened at Facebook's Menlo Park, Calif. headquarters for the first time last month, and its 18 members will serve for six months up to a year.

The Council

Council members include an equity theater company in New Jersey with a six-figure marketing budget for the year that intends to spend 30 to 35% of it on Facebook; an auction site for jewelry and clothes that operates on the social network, whose owners spent $60,000 on Facebook ads last year; and a Kansas City, Mo.-based plumbing company that spends $300 a month on Facebook.

The recent decline of organic reach was a major discussion topic when the group convened in Silicon Valley last month. It's a sticky point for Facebook with advertisers of any size. Small businesses with limited advertising budgets are even more reliant on free publishing on Facebook than big brands.

That's borne out in the numbers: Facebook has over a million active advertisers. But 25 million small and medium-sized businesses have Facebook pages.

"The challenge is how to get businesses to understand the value that's there, since they weren't paying for it at all and now they're going to have to," said Jim Donio, president of the Eagle Theatre in Hammonton, N.J.

Mr. Donio wants to develop a Facebook education program for businesses and has yet to determine whether it would be free or for-profit and whether it would focus on theaters or a broader set of businesses.

Another Council member, Jeff Morgan of Kansas City's Morgan Miller Plumbing, is also thinking about potentially setting up a side business of Facebook classes.

He says his business makes $2,000 a week in service calls that originate from Facebook. Its page is a mix of content, including employee spotlights, dog photos, and a recent shot of the dispatcher dressed as the Kansas City Royals mascot to celebrate baseball's opening day.

"About one in every 10 posts is about plumbing," he said. "Other than that, we do stuff about puppy dogs and unicorns."

Algorithm Predicts Which Photos Will Go Viral On Facebook

Social News Daily//Megan Charles

Stanford University researchers have developed a computer algorithm that can predict which photos will likely go viral on Facebook.

In a report being presented at the International World Wide Web Conference in Seoul, South Korea, Jure Leskovec, Stanford doctoral student Justin Cheng, Facebook researchers Lada Adamic and P Alex Dow, and Cornell University computer scientist Jon Kleinberg, describe how they created an algorithm capable of accurately predicting (8 out of 10 times) which Facebook posted photos would go viral.

Statistically, based on data provided by Facebook scientists, only one in 20 photos posted on the social network gets shared maybe once. And just one in 4,000 gets more than 500 shares.

While reviewing what they called photo cascades, researchers studied how quickly a photo was seen and shared – garnering clues as to how a photo goes from being relatively obscure to prolific on cyberspace.

The term ‘cascades’ is used to describe photos or videos being shared multiple times.

The team began by analyzing 150,000 Facebook photos, each of which had been shared at least five times. The data was stripped of identifiers to protect user privacy.

A preliminary analysis of test photos revealed that, at any given point in a cascade, there was a 50-50 chance that the number of shares would double. Variables were assessed in order to determine when doubling events would likely occur, explains The Stanford Daily.

After factoring other criteria, the scientists were able to accurately predict doubling events almost 80 percent of the time. The speed of sharing was the best predictor. Their algorithm became more accurate the more times a photo was shared; 88 percent for photos shared hundreds of times.

But what aspects of a photo drives it to go viral? Alas, other than being shared on multiple platforms, the researchers found no simple trick to ensure widespread sharing.

Salt Lake Mom Monitoring Facebook Helped Thwart Teen Shooting, Police Say

Deseret News//Pat Reavy

A planned shooting near West High School involving a student was thwarted late last week thanks to a mother keeping an eye on her son's Facebook page, according to police.

On Friday, a West High parent called the school's resource officer — who is also a Salt Lake police officer — to report comments allegedly written by two male teenagers on Facebook claiming they were going to shoot her son.

"She had actually read threats and seen the threat on his Facebook page," said Salt Lake police detective Greg Wilking. "There were very specific threats that they were going to go to the high school and shoot her son."

In addition, Wilking said, "There was a picture of the gun on Instagram, the gun that was seized. And there were letters written on the hand that was holding the gun, and those letters were gang affiliated."

Just after 2 p.m., the officer found the teens in a vehicle parked at 220 W. 300 North, close by the school. Inside the vehicle officers reported finding a gun and a loaded magazine, cash, marijuana and a "large bong."

The teens may have been waiting for their intended target to walk by after school, Wilking said.

Police could not say Monday whether the two teenagers who were arrested were also West High students. Two boys, ages 16 and 17, were booked into juvenile detention for investigation of various charges, said Wilking. The incident is believed to be gang related.

Wilking praised the intended victim's mother for actively monitoring her son's social media pages, and contacting police when she saw a potential threat.

Instagram Helps Launch Careers of Local Talents

Arab News//Sultan Al-Sughair

Many online social networking sites, including Instagram, have become global technological phenomena, which have helped launch the careers of many local talents.

Instagram has opened the door to many young talents and has enabled them to break the barriers of their own countries to reach various countries worldwide by sharing photographs of their work.

Laila Al-Thamir, a student, said that she takes shots of her daily life activities especially her hobbies, whether cooking or embroidery, then chooses a photo to share on her Instagram account.

"Many of my friends and acquaintances like my photos and many colleagues call to ask for a certain dish's recipe from the ones I shared on Instagram," she said.

Meanwhile, Norah Al-Saleh, a student, pointed out that photography is a hobby that is no longer expensive and has become accessible to many due to the technical developments in devices.

She said, "I still remember the days when I used to ask my father to take my film rolls to the studio to print the photos, it used to take several hours or a day to pick the photos up and pay for them."

Al-Saleh said that cameras have evolved and become high-resolution devices and with the presence of social networking sites time and money are no longer wasted, as these sites offer an expedient and efficient platform to share art and ideas.

She said, "People can take pictures using their mobile phones at any moment, and share their shots immediately."

Na'eema Al-Yousif, an employee, highlighted that Instagram is a beautiful phenomenon that highlights women's productivity and talents and creates a network of support.

Agreeing with Al-Yousif, Kareema Al-Rubai'a, a university student, added that the application has given men and women the opportunity and means to express their creativity.

Abdullah Al-Maghluth, a specialist in digital media, said that many individuals launched their careers and received wide recognition by posting pictures of their work on Instagram.

He said, "Nowadays, many international newspapers dedicate a corner to publish pictures taken from social networking sites such as Twitter, Facebook and Instagram. This indicates the power of these sites in reaching the masses in an immediate, convenient and effective manner."

Twitter Acquires Android Lockscreen App Cover, Moves Deeper Into Mobile Services TechCrunch//Ingrid Lunden

A very interesting acquisition announcement from Twitter today: it's buying Cover, an Android lockscreen app that lets you customise what apps you see and when. For now, Cover will remain live in the Play store.

"If that changes down the road, we'll provide another update here," the founders Todd Jackson, Gordon Luk and Edward Ho note in a blog post announcing the deal.

Cover is being somewhat cryptic in discussing what it will be working on at Twitter. "Twitter, like Cover, believes in the incredible potential of Android," they write. "They share our vision that smartphones can be a lot smarter — more useful and more contextual — and together we're going to make that happen. We'll be building upon a lot of what makes Cover great, and we're thrilled to create something even better at Twitter."

At the same time, when you consider the work that Facebook has done in developing its Home service around the Android lockscreen, it's clear that on some level, if an app is not owning the SIM that controls the entire phone, or the operating system, this is one very obvious way to remain front of mind for a user and incorporate a series of services that become front and center features for a user.

Apps are an overcrowded game. So owning the lockscreen gives you, effectively, a place to be first in the queue. It also gives Twitter some interesting potential routes for how it might longer-term try to deliver its stream of followers' new and messages outside of its own app. Widgets featuring Twitter, Facebook, Pinterest and other streams are already quite common; Cover could work on ways to formalise and improve that experience.

One question that lingers for me is how, when, and if companies like Twitter (and Facebook) will ever be able to think about these problems in the same way on iOS.

More generally, mobile has become a huge business for Twitter. Apart from the fact that Twitter was created as a mobile-first service, Twitter generates more in advertising from mobile than it does from desktop. Cover, meanwhile, says it has picked up "hundreds of thousands" of users since launching in October 2013.

To date, Cover had raised $1.7 million in funding, a seed round from First Round Capital, Harrison Metal, Max Levchin, Scott Banister, Charlie Cheever, Keith Rabois, Dave Girouard and Alex Franz.

More to come.

Andromeda: Google's Secret Weapon To Keep Amazon And Microsoft On Their Toes

Readwrite//Jodi Mardesich

Years ago, Google figured out that users prize speed above almost everything when it comes to surfing the Web. They're now applying that insight to courting developers, too, through a tool named Andromeda.

Google Compute Engine, the version of Google's infrastructure it rents out to developers, is getting access to Andromeda, a set of technologies the company uses to speed up its own networking. Last week, it turned Andromeda on in two of its four Compute Engine zones this week.

Enter Andromeda

Andromeda's not a product Google's cloud customers can sign up for, and it doesn't have APIs developers can write to directly. So, what's the fuss about?

Google Distinguished Engineer Amin Vahdat described it in a post:

Andromeda is a Software Defined Networking (SDN)-based substrate for our network virtualization efforts. It is the orchestration point for provisioning, configuring, and managing virtual networks and in-network packet processing.

Let's unpack that: Increasingly, rather than setting up data centers, storage, and networks by setting up new servers, companies are using software to run existing hardware in new ways. By defining usage in software, you can disaggregate and share expensive physical resources. In the case of software-defined networking, the resources—servers, routers, switches, and so on— are deep in the bowels of Google's data centers, which provide the underpinnings for its cloud infrastructure.

Network virtualization means that even though many customers are sharing the same network—both Google itself, as well as its cloud customers—they can be configured and managed independently, with their own address management, firewalls, and access control lists.

"If you choose to run your own infrastructure, you can make those investments, but it requires you to figure out how to scale this out and manage it," says Google product manager Sunil James. "Google Cloud gives you the ability to grow your business at whatever scale you need. Andromeda is an example of the kind of thinking we have at Google in terms of how we want to make something scalable and robust, not only for Google to use, but for our customers."

For Google customers, that means they have to make fewer tradeoffs when they move their computing to the cloud.

Google is far from alone in taking the software-defined approach to its network. Amazon and Microsoft, its archrivals in cloud computing, also use SDN. Microsoft has had 100 developers working for four years on software-defined networking features for Azure. Like Google, it uses the same SDN technologies for its own services like Xbox Live, Skype and Office 365 that it does in Azure. Amazon Web Services has had software-defined networking features like CloudFormation for years.

But while Google may be playing catch-up in rolling out SDN features to developers, it has the unique advantage of the gigantic scale of its in-house computing infrastructure, which it has honed for high-throughput performance.

Vying For Developers

Last month, Google slashed its cloud pricing. Now Andromeda gives it another weapon in the battle for developers—performance. In this case, that means the speed of data transmission.

Even though Google just turned on Andromeda in some of its cloud last week, customers are already noticing a difference.

David Mytton, CEO of Server Density, a server- and website-monitoring service based in London, ran benchmarks comparing throughput of Google Cloud without Andromeda, Google Cloud with Andromeda, and Amazon's EC2 service. With Andromeda, he said Google was nine times faster than Amazon. (That sounds remarkable, but it's actually just a modest improvement, since even without Andromeda, Mytton found Google's performance was seven times that of Amazon.)

Data throughput is only one way to benchmark cloud-computing services, and it may not matter to all customers. Still, the combination of lowered prices and high performance is compelling for some.

Mytton, who is evaluating cloud providers as he considers a move from his current provider, SoftLayer, said he is leaning toward Google due to its performance and lower cost.

"Amazon is very expensive," he said. "You have to pay a lot of upfront costs."

Still, there are some services he is still looking for, like "the ability to have guaranteed throughput between regions," which Google doesn't currently offer. The good news is that Andromeda provides a foundation to build those services in the future.

E-Learning Platform Lynda.com Buys Compiler To Add In-Browser Coding Tools, Price Around $20M

TechCrunch//Ingrid Lunden

Lynda.com, the online education platform that raised its first and only round of $103 million about a year ago, is today announcing an acquisition that will further Lynda.com's reach with developers and expand the kinds of services it can offer to users. It's acquiring Compilr, a Halifax, Canada startup that runs a cloud-based platform for people to learn, write and test code from within a browser. The companies are not commenting on the terms of the deal but we have heard that it is for around $20 million.

Compilr will now become part of the Lynda.com platform.

It looks like Compilr, co-founded and run by Patrick Hankinson and Tim Speed, was bootstrapped before today. That's something that aligns well with the culture and ethos at Lynda.com, which was also self-funded until it took its mammoth round from Accel and Spectrum Equity last year. But that lack of outside investment may have also been one of the things that hindered Compilr's growth longer term. In 2012, Hankinson noted that Compilr was rejected by more than 35 VCs — something that compelled the company to implement charging models early on, with monthly subscriptions to the service costing $10.

It's not clear if those prices will remain intact; Lynda for now is not commenting further on the deal. In any case, existing Compilr users are being offered free training now on Lynda.com.

Compilr is only Lynda.com's second acquisition ever. The first was Geramay's video2brain last year, made to grow the company's international portfolio.

So where will Compilr fit into Lynda.com? Up to now, a lot of Lynda.com's business has been based around an expansive collection of videos covering the areas of software and technology, as well as general business training and the creative industries. That catalog is pushing some 100,000 videos to date. Compilr will not only add more on-site training abilities, with its cloud-based platform for creating code; but it will help Lynda.com expand more in the specific vertical of tech and offering services and courses to developers (and developers in training).

"The acquisition of Compilr reflects our dedication to providing members the best way to learn across a variety of segments, whether we build or buy to achieve those goals," Eric Robison, president and CEO of lynda.com, said in a statement. "We recognize the growing market demand for programming language instruction and are committed to providing a broad range of high-quality computer programming courses. This aligns with our learning philosophy and allows us to maintain and grow our market leadership."

As a famous VC once said, software is eating the world, and so the need for more software engineers is certainly not diminishing. Lynda.com cites figures from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics that project employment of software developers growing 22% between 2012 and 2022, "much faster than the average for all occupations."

Compilr currently supports some 12 programming languages and offers courses and support for beginners as well as advanced programmers.

Compilr competes with the likes of Koding, Cloud9 IDE, and Codenvy.

High Court Won't Take Up NSA Case

The Hill//Julian Hattam

The Supreme Court on Monday declined an initial challenge to the National Security Agency's (NSA) bulk collection of information about the public's telephone calls.

The high court passed on a chance to review a lower court ruling that found the controversial program "almost Orwellian," which means the case will go through the normal appeals process as lawmakers battle over reform proposals.

An intervention from the court would have been unusual, but conservative activist and lawyer Larry Klayman had tried to leapfrog the appeals process because of the importance of the issue.

The NSA program collects phone metadata, a list of which numbers people call as well as the frequency and duration of their calls, but not the content of the conversations themselves.

The issue has become the subject of a slew of court challenges from Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.), the American Civil Liberties Union and other advocacy groups.

In December, Judge Richard Leon of the U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C., said that the NSA program, revealed by former agency contractor Edward Snowden, was likely unconstitutional. The ruling was a major blow to defenders of the spy agency and preceded a similar ruling from a government civil liberties panel in January.

Other judges have disagreed. A judge on the New York District Court ruled to uphold the program, as have judges on the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court.

The high court's decision not to take up the case comes as Congress has begun debating legislative ways to end the NSA's data collection.

A plan unveiled by the White House late last month, which would need to be passed by Congress, would keep the records in the hands of private phone companies, accessible to government agents with a court order.

Another proposal from leaders of the House Intelligence Committee would similarly end the government's collection of the records, but make it easier for agents to obtain them from a private company.

Congress needs to authorize reforms to the program by next June or else lose it altogether, an outcome intelligence officials have said would be disastrous.

The case is Klayman v. Obama.

GOP Bill Keeps US Internet Control

The Hill//Peter Kasperowicz

Rep. Sean Duffy (R-Wis.) has proposed legislation that would block the federal government from handing over control of the Internet management system.

Back in March, the Department of Commerce said it would begin to cede control over the system that operates the Internet's domain name system. That system is now controlled by the Commerce Department's National Telecommunications and Information Administration (NTIA).

The NTIA said it would continue to oversee the Internet Corp. for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN) through September 2015, but then it would ease out of the role.

That announcement led to immediate criticism that the move would reduce the control the U.S. has over Internet functions and increase the risk that Internet freedom could slip away without that U.S. influence. Duffy's bill, H.R. 4398, says flatly that the NTIA cannot cede its control.

"As Americans, we value our constitutional right of freedom of speech and have promoted this value throughout the world," he said in a statement to The Hill. "We should not give up our stewardship of the Internet so that the United Nations or countries like China or Russia, that do not hold free speech in the same regard, can have the opportunity to take control."

Duffy's bill is the Global Internet Freedom (GIF) Act. The two-page legislation says the assistant secretary of Commerce for communications and information "may not relinquish the responsibility of the National Telecommunications and information Administration with respect to the Internet Assigned Numbers Authority Functions."

Google Appeals Ongoing YouTube Blockade in Turkey

RT//Staff Writer

US internet giant Google has gone to Turkey's Constitutional Court to appeal the government's decision to block its video file sharing service YouTube. The ban, which had been imposed before local elections, has been upheld by a local court ruling.

Google on Monday said it has filed three appeals to Turkish courts in relation to the ongoing blackout of YouTube. Three petitions have been filed to Turkish criminal, administrative and constitutional courts by Google's lawyers, the Wall Street Journal (WSJ) reported.

According to the Hurriyet Daily News, YouTube's Turkish lawyer, Gonenc Gurkaynak, has filed a complaint to the Turkish Constitutional Court and a lawsuit demanding "a stay of execution and cancelation of the decision on the ban" to the 4th Administrative Court of Ankara. Gurkaynak also appealed the ruling of the Golbasi Criminal Court that annulled its own decision on lifting the ban on April 5.

Turkey's Telecommunications Authority (TIB) blocked YouTube on March 27 after allegedly leaked audiotapes of senior Turkish officials discussing a false flag operation against Syria emerged there days before local elections. While the government advocated the ban citing national security concerns, TIB cited a decision by Golbasi Criminal Court.

Curiously, the same Ankara-based court on Saturday changed its own decision by ordering only 15 YouTube videos to be banned instead of the entire service. The latest ruling followed a Constitutional Court order to unblock Twitter, which the court blasted as a violation of freedom of speech. Today's Zaman claimed that the lower court then issued a "self-critical" statement, also calling its earlier ruling a "major intervention into freedom of speech, a fundamental value of a democratic society."

However, the local prosecutor's office challenged the April-5 decision and it was promptly overturned by the higher Golbasi Criminal Court of First Instance, which stated the blocking of YouTube must continue until the "criminal content" is removed from the site.

A Google spokesman told the WSJ via email that “it is obviously very disappointing to people and businesses in Turkey that YouTube is still blocked, and we are actively challenging the ban in the courts.” The outlet said Google’s defense argued in the petitions that the nationwide blocking of YouTube is “overbroad” under Turkish law and then required a constitutional challenge “based on freedom of speech.”

Google recently claimed that its services are being effectively blocked by Turkish internet providers, who reportedly are using all means to prevent the users from circumventing the ban. Turkish providers are also believed to be still blocking Twitter despite the Constitutional Court’s ruling, which Turkish Prime Minister Recep Tayyip Erdogan said he has to obey but “do[es] not respect.”

The recent scandals involving Erdogan’s government and the social media ban that followed them caused outrage in Turkish society, with opposition-minded activists condemning the ban as an act of “censorship” and “dictatorship.” However, Erdogan’s AKP party’s candidates managed to win at the March-30 local elections in 49 of the 81 Turkish regions, highlighting the Turkish leader’s popularity despite all the controversy.

In Ankara, where the AKP and main opposition party, CHP, ran an extremely tight race, thousands of demonstrators took to the streets last week demanding that the Supreme Electoral Council recount the local election results. AKP was declared the winner in the Turkish capital with a slender one percent of margin. CHP filed an official recount request, while the protesters were pushed off Ankara’s streets with police water cannon and tear gas.

WhatsApp, E-Plus Launch A €10 SIM In Germany With Free WhatsApp Usage Included TechCrunch//Ingrid Lunden

Back in February, Jan Koum, CEO of Facebook-owned WhatsApp, hinted that the company would soon be unveiling a new way of working with carriers, first in Germany, with special tariffs to access the app. Today that deal is now live. E-Plus now sells a prepaid SIM that gives users unlimited access to WhatsApp outside of their data plans.

For €10 ($14), users get 600 credits that can be used interchangeably for 1 megabyte of data, 1 minute of talk or 1 SMS (each costs 1 credit), plus all the WhatsApp messaging that they might want to use. It’s not clear whether voice services, which WhatsApp says are coming but have yet to launch in Germany, will come as part of the deal or whether they will be charged separately.

As the German blog AndroidNext points out, WhatsApp is installed on some 90 percent of smartphones in the country already — working out to some 30 million users. In other words, this seems to be less about spreading the good word about WhatsApp as it is about E-Plus trying to pick up users off rival carriers. An aggressive move in a competitive market.

On the other hand, given that Germany is a “safe” market for WhatsApp (ironically a market that has been rather challenging for Facebook on the privacy front) it’s a good place for it to try out new things like this to see how well they do. As the company — and Facebook — move deeper into mobile telephony services like voice, seeing if they can get users to pay up for “WhatsApp SIMs” is a logical step.

As for how it works, SIM top-ups, as well as top-ups for extra credits for the month, come via an interface that appears to be separate from WhatsApp itself but has been created with the same branding and styling as the app itself:

Longer term, E-Plus says that it will enable users to activate automatic top-ups. To promote the SIM, it’s also encouraging users to recommend other friends to use it; for every two friends who use your reference code, you get an extra €10 credit.

This is not the first time that WhatsApp has worked with carriers; it offers reduced tariffs with bundles with some 50 different mobile operators worldwide. What’s different here is how it has integrated with E-Plus to create a SIM, which now comes with WhatsApp branding along with the free usage allowance. It doesn’t appear that taking the SIM lets you waive the $0.99 annual subscription fee for WhatsApp itself that users need to pay after the first year of service, however.

We’re reaching out to WhatsApp for more information and will update when we learn more.

UNREDACTED VERSION OF DOCUMENT SOUGHT TO BE LODGED UNDER SEAL

Latest blog post:

Easily upgrade to Graph API v2.x with no code changes

Today, we're announcing a new tool to help you upgrade to Graph API v2.0 without making any code changes.

At last year's F8, we announced the Graph API v2.0 and the new Facebook Login. On April 30, 2015, all apps will automatically be upgraded to Graph API v2.0 and the new Login, so we're focused on adding tools and features to make it easier to upgrade your apps before then.

Last December, we added the ability for you to use Test Users to see how your app will behave against Graph API v2.x without having to update your code. Many of you tested your apps, and gave us the feedback that you'd like a simple way to take the next step: to upgrade without having to write code and redeploy. Now, we are launching a button that allows your app to use Graph API v2.0 by default.

To make the change, go to the Migration tab of your app's Settings page. You can switch the "Use Graph API v2.0 by default" setting to ON (or OFF to revert your app back to its original state).

[screen shot]

Here's what will happen after you enable this migration:

1. People who log into your app will see the new Facebook Login dialog which gives them greater control over what information they share. This means people will be able to decline to grant one or more of the permissions you're requesting.
2. Only the permissions which remain available in v2.0 will be shown in the login dialog or be useable when making API calls: e.g. the `friends_birthday` permission will not be grantable, and API calls which use this permission may return empty arrays.
3. People logging into your app for the first time will be known by an app-scoped user ID. Note that if you enable and then later disable this migration, people who first logged into your app while the migration was enabled will still be known by the same app-scoped ID.
4. Calls to `/me/friends` will return the user's friends who also use the app.

This is the same set of changes which will come into effect for all apps on April 30, 2015. For the full list, please see the changelog.

If your app relies on some of the features which have changed or been deprecated in v2.0, we suggest you do not enable your migration using this new tool, and instead manually update your app to call Graph API v2.0 or above. With the migration date only a few weeks away, we advise you to begin making these changes now. For more information on how to upgrade to v2.0, please see the upgrade guide.

But if your app is already able to handle these changes, or if you're not using features which have changed, you can now instantly upgrade your app with the flick of a switch.

We hope this makes it easier to upgrade some of your apps to Graph API v2.0 and the new Facebook Login.

Subj: New API upgrade tool for Facebook developers

Hi X,

Wanted to give you a quick heads up on a new upgrade tool for developers that Facebook released today, allowing developers who are currently using Graph API v1.0 to easily upgrade their apps to Graph API v2.0 or higher without the ~~headache~~ — no need to rewrite code and redeploy.

As a reminder, as we announced at F8 2014 that all developers must upgrade to Graph API v2.0 or higher before v1.0 is deprecated on April 30, 2015. We hope this new feature makes it even easier for some developers to upgrade their apps before the deadline.

You can find out more about it [\[here\]](#) — including which developers should use the tool, and what they can expect to happen after they do. Let me know if you have any questions.

Thanks,
X

Subject: Graph API blog post for this week

Hey Juliet/OC team,

Here's an early draft of the blog post I mentioned to Juliet last week, that will be going out sometime this week. It's basically another tool for developers to make the migration easier for them, similar to this one that we announced last year. I think it's worth sending as an FYI to the same small group of reporters that we pitched about the previous tool. Think we got a few small hits from that outreach such as Programmable Web, etc. It's also a good opportunity to remind reporters that the deadline is coming up, since we want this to be a non-surprise/ non-news item when April 30 comes.

Do you guys mind digging up the target list we used last time around, and helping with outreach?

Thanks,
Johanna

Easily upgrade to Graph API v2.x with no code changes

At last year's F8, we announced the new Graph API v2.0, and today we are excited to share with you an easy way to upgrade your apps to Graph API v. 2.0 or greater with no code changes.

Last December, we gave you the ability to test how your app will perform with Graph API v2.x without having to update your code. Many of you tested your apps, and gave us the feedback that you'd like a simple way to take the next step. Now, we're adding a feature to make this possible, making it easy for you to upgrade without having to rewrite code and redeploy.

To make the change, go to the My Settings page in your app dashboard [LINK], then click on Migrations. You can switch [name of the button] to ON (or OFF to revert your app back to its original state).

[Need screenshot of the app dashboard]

The deadline to migrate to Graph API v2.x is April 30th, 2015. We advise you to make the change even earlier, to ensure that your apps continue to perform as expected after the upgrade. On April 30, 2015, all API calls which don't specify version v2.0 or greater will automatically behave like v2.0 calls.

Here are some changes that you can expect after migrating:

1. People who use your app will see the new Facebook Login which gives them greater control over what information they share.
2. If your app is requesting permissions other than the basic ones, you will need to go through Facebook Login Review to continue receiving those permissions after April 30th, 2015. The review process takes time, so plan accordingly.
3. New users in your app will be identified by an app-scoped ID instead of by their Facebook ID. Please note that even if you use the new switch to reverse your upgrade, these users will continue to be identified by their app-scoped ID.
4. The new Graph API v2.x allows developers to unlock additional features such as the Tagged Places API, the Social Context API and Page Mentions.

For more information on how to upgrade to v2.x, please see the upgrade guide.

Subj: You're invited: Facebook Whiteboard re: Login and API Changes

Hi X,

XX here on behalf of Facebook – hope you're well. As you might know, April 30 will mark some major changes for developers building apps with Facebook. Starting on that day, Facebook will begin requiring every app to use the New Login and Graph API that we announced at F8 last year. After a year of working to incorporate these changes, what does April 30 mean for developers, and what differences will people see in the apps they use everyday?

Facebook will be hosting a Whiteboard session for reporters to address these topics next Tuesday, April 28 from 11:00 a.m. To Noon PT at The OutCast Agency's new office at 100 Montgomery St. Suite 1200 (lunch will be served). We hope you can attend to hear from the Facebook product leadership in charge of spearheading the transition. You'll have the opportunity to hear updates on how the transition has been going since F8 2014, understand how this significant shift in the Platform fits into Facebook's overall strategy, and ask any questions you might have.

If you're able to join us, can you please RSVP by Thursday, April 23?

Thanks! Please let me know if you have any questions.

Best,
XX

Hey Kacie,

I made a couple more small tweaks to the pitch below, per our Messenger chat.

For the targets, a few questions and changes:

- BuzzFeed – I think we have a new reporter there, right? Maybe check the summer media party list. Let's invite that person.

Good flag! We've added Brendan Klinkenberg as he's the new FB reporter.

- Rob Hof – where does he freelance? Not sure if we need him?

He freelances for Forbes and MIT Tech Review; he's a great advocate for us and wrote this awesome piece in late February about App Install Ads (ads/deep linking): <http://www.technologyreview.com/news/535431/app-ads-are-booming-business-for-facebook/>

- SF Chronicle and the Merc — Remove, don't think this is as important for them.

We've removed; we included them on there because based on past experience with Whiteboards, they do a great job covering us and writing positive pieces

- For TechCrunch, let's start with Josh and Sarah — then we can invite Kyle as a backup if neither of them can make it Agreed!

- VentureBeat — Let's just invite Daniel, remove Emil

We actually recommend leaving Emil because Daniel is moving to Fast Company and will only be with FB through the end of April.

Once these changes are made, let's plan to reach out this afternoon. I'm confirming w Eddie right now (Simon has confirmed) so please hang tight for my green light.

Thanks!
Johanna

Hi JP – Thanks so much for your input. We'll add in Wendell to our media list as a courtesy invite and can plan to share our blog post with him in advance of 4/30. The edits made to the pitch look great – think it makes sense to keep this topic separate from F8 to avoid confusion and incorporate language tying this back to FB's overall initiative.

For staffing, one of us will definitely plan to join. Were you able to get in touch with Simon/Eddie to see if 11 a.m. To Noon works for them? We'll want to ensure a little wiggle room time too for them to do lunch afterward and socialize with reporters there and prep beforehand as needed.

Let me know if it's easier to hop on the phone and chat through this. Thanks again!

Thanks so much, Kacie and OC team.

Target list — I'll take another quick sweep first thing in the morning, but overall this looks right to me. Let's also add Wendell Santos from Programmable Web (courtesy/Seattle based) – he's come to us with a few inquiries about the migration API stuff and written a few articles.

For timing— sounds good, I agree that Tuesday at 11-12 should be good. Let me check with Eddie/Simon on their schedules. Agree that Eddie is great as a spokesperson and we should use him. Thinking we might actually want them both in the room, if they can both make it, and we can have them each do a little of the talking. Let me circle back when I see which of them is free.

For staffing, I'll definitely attend and it would be great if one of you could join as well.

Let me know when you know more on location.

For the pitch, I made some tweaks below — don't want to associate this too much with F8 2015, as I don't want to suggest that it's related to something we announced last month. Also tried to emphasize a little more why these changes are important/ why reporters should care — let me know what you think of this version.

Let's circle back on all of these items tomorrow and hopefully we can start reaching out.

Thanks,
Johanna

Subj: You're invited: Facebook Whiteboard re: Platform Changes

Hi X,

XX here on behalf of Facebook — hope you're well. As you might know, April 30 will mark some major changes for developers building apps with Facebook. Starting on that day, Facebook will begin requiring every app to use the New Login and Graph API that we announced at F8 last year. After a year of working to incorporate these changes, what does April 30 mean for developers, and what differences will people see in the apps they use everyday?

Facebook will be hosting a Whiteboard session for reporters to address these topics next Tuesday, April 28 from 11:00 a.m. To Noon PT, followed by lunch in San Francisco. Hi JP — As discussed, please find our list of targets via Quip here and pitch below. A few recommendations on our end:

- Spokesperson — We recommend Eddie, as he was the one who was our Login spokesperson when we first announced it last year at f8; good to continue uniformity
- Timing — As you'll notice in our pitch below, we recommend doing 11 a.m. To Noon PT with lunch after. Based on past experiences, it's good to not schedule these too early (due to existing stories they need to file) or late to give them time to write after the event.
- Secondary plan — If for some reason we get a lot of declines, we can proactively engage with a number of influential/go-to outlets on the migration to educate them leading up to 4/30
- Day-of outreach — we recommend conducting wide day-of outreach on 4/30 to highlight the blog post and changes to developer platform
- Staffing — Would you like us to plan on attending to staff the event?
- Location — we recommend OC in SF; we're confirming this and will share updates ASAP

Subject: Brainstorm - Migration proactive strategy

Hi OC,

Following up on my note from last week — wanted to start an email brainstorm, since this is something we'd like to move fast on. As you know, April 30 is the Login/API migration date and we've already started seeing one-off inquiries from press spurred by developers who are communicating to their users about the upcoming changes (e.g. The Fusion story about the Tobii app, etc). We'd like to do some proactive press activities early next week, with the goal of 1) reminding and educating reporters on what's going to happen, 2) telling the big-picture story of why we're making the changes (protecting people's information), and 3) generating some neutral/positive coverage that hits on our messaging, giving us something to point back to after April 30 in case reporters notice apps breaking, etc. Overall, this migration is a positive thing for the app ecosystem and for people, and we want to make sure reporters understand the full context so they're less likely to sensationalize stories or report things out of context as the migration rolls out.

Our team has brainstormed a few potential strategies and I'd love to get your thoughts.

Current preferred strategy — Whiteboard.

- Hold a whiteboard early next week (probably Tuesday) with Simon and/or Eddie speaking to a group of reporters.
- Content would roughly follow the attached narrative. Goal is to emphasize the "people first" story and clear up any confusion about what's happening.
- There will not be a lot of news — Although we can potentially share a new stat or two — but mainly the hook/pitch will be "Facebook is rolling out the new Login and a bunch of major changes to its developer Platform on 4/30 — come learn what that means for developers, and what changes people will see in their apps."
- We have a blog post going up on the Dev Blog that we will time with this session, and can give to reporters under embargo — "What to Expect on April 30." Draft attached here.

Alternative Strategies:

- Deskside tour instead of whiteboard. Given this would take more spokesperson time, is there any advantage to doing 1:1 conversations as opposed to a group?
- Single press story — work with someone like JP/Mashable on an exclusive, telling the same story as above. Leaning away from this option, since it doesn't accomplish the broad press education that we want to achieve, so we risk that some reporters still will be confused when they see changes on 4/30.

We're leaning toward a whiteboard, but If you feel strongly about a different strategy or have any feedback / additional suggestions, please let me know. I'd like to finalize the strategy and start moving on next steps by EOD today.

If you guys agree on the idea of a whiteboard, would you be able to help get a pitch started and send me a list of your recommendations for attendees? Would love to set a date/time and start reaching out early this week.

Thanks,
Johanna

Subj: Updates for Facebook Developers on April 30

Hi XX -

As you may know, at F8 in 2014, we introduced some changes to give people more control over the information they share with apps. We announced the new Facebook Login, which lets people edit the information they share with an app when they log in, along with a Login Review process and other changes to our API designed to protect people's information.

When we introduced these changes year, we asked all developers to upgrade their apps to use the new Login and API by April 30th, 2015. On that date (this Thursday), we'll begin to upgrade all apps to Graph API v2.0 and removing access to any permissions that have not been approved via Login Review.

Many developers have already upgraded their apps, and we're excited about the results:

- Our Login Review team has reviewed more than 40,000 apps.
- On average, apps using the new Facebook Login are requesting 50 percent fewer permissions than apps using the previous version of Login. When apps request only the permissions that are right for people using them, people feel more comfortable logging into those apps.
- In fact, the overall average rate of people logging in using the new Login is 11 percentage points higher than the previous version.

If a developer has not yet upgraded their app, it will be automatically upgraded on or after April 30, though they can still choose to upgrade at any time before that happens. For details on what happens when an app upgrades, see our blog post below and online here [\[insert link to blog post\]](#). Please let me know if you have any questions or need anything else.

Thanks,
XX

What to Expect on April 30 - Upgrading to Graph API and the New Login

At F8 in 2014, we introduced Graph API v2.0, the new Facebook Login, and a lightweight Login Review process. The goal of these changes was to give people more control over the information they share with apps. We asked all developers to upgrade their apps and go through Login Review by April 30, 2015. On that date, we'll begin upgrading all apps to Graph API v2.0 and removing access to any permissions that have not been approved via Login Review.

During the past year, many developers have already migrated their apps, and we're excited about the results:

- Our Login Review team has reviewed more than 40,000 apps.
- On average, apps using the new Facebook Login are requesting 50 percent fewer permissions than apps using the previous version of Login. When apps request only the permissions they need, people feel more comfortable logging into those apps.
- The combined effects of Graph API v2, the new Login, and Login Review mean the overall average conversion rate of the new Login dialog is 11 percentage points higher than the previous version.
- People approve commonly requested permissions such as `email`, `user_friends` and `user_birthday` more than 97% of the time.

Beginning April 30, we'll start upgrading all apps to the New Login and Graph API v2. To see if your app has been automatically upgraded, you can go to your app's Dashboard to see the oldest version of the API that your app can access.

[screen shot]

If your app hasn't been migrated yet, you can opt in to the migration at any time by updating your app's code to call Graph API v2.0, or by enabling the "Use Graph API v2.0 by default" switch in your app's settings tab, under "Migrations." We strongly recommend upgrading by these methods, rather than waiting for the automatic upgrade, as this gives you more control over when people start seeing changes in your app.

[screen shot]

As a reminder, when an app is upgraded, the following things will happen:

- People will see the new Facebook Login Dialog, with the ability to decline permissions — so new users may not grant all the permissions you request.

- New people logging into the app will be known by an app-scoped ID.
- Only permissions which have been approved via Login Review will be shown in the Login Dialog.
- Only permissions which have been approved via Login Review will be used when making API calls on behalf of existing users.
- Certain permissions (e.g. friends_photos) will no longer be available.

As more apps across the ecosystem upgrade to the new API and Login next week, we'd like to thank you and the entire developer community for working with us to create a better app ecosystem for people. We can't wait to see you build more awesome apps and mobile businesses with Facebook.

If you have further questions, please visit our FAQ and comprehensive guide to the API v1.0 deprecation.

Subject: Re: Migration Follow-up

Thanks, Kacie. Appreciate the follow-up. We definitely do expect some further complaints from vocal developers in the next few days/weeks as the migration rolls out — We're not out of the woods yet!

So, for reactive language and materials, I made some tweaks to the draft below — lmk what you think of this. Great to have this ready in our back pocket as the migration starts tomorrow.

Draft Statement (Use if we need to go on-the-record):

"We announced these changes to Facebook Login and our API last year, in order to give people more control over the information they share with apps. We believe the changes will benefit both people and developers. As many developers have incorporated these changes in their apps over the past year, we've seen that people have better experiences logging into apps, and are more likely to log in, when they have control over what they share."

Background points (Use whatever is relevant for a given inquiry):

- We made changes to Facebook Login and our API last year, and also introduced a Login Review process, in order to give people more control over the information they share with apps.
- [for questions about friend permissions specifically] As part of the changes that we made to our API last year, we announced that people can now only share their own information with apps; they can no longer share their friends' information (e.g. Likes, photos, birthday, etc.) We made this change because we heard feedback that people were surprised when their friends shared their information with an app.
- We gave developers one year to make these changes in their apps and to submit their apps for Login Review.
- As we announced last year, on April 30, 2015, we begin automatically upgrading any apps that have not yet done so.
- Many developers have already upgraded their apps, including the majority of popular apps people use every day (such as Pinterest, Netflix, SoundCloud, and more.)
- So far, for apps that have upgraded, the rate of people logging in with the new Login has increased 11 percentage points over the previous version of Login — which indicates that people increasingly feel comfortable logging in with Facebook.
- Also, apps are asking people for 50% fewer permissions, indicating that more apps are asking for only the information they need to create a good experience for people.
- We spent the last year working with developers on this transition and providing them with feedback on how their apps will perform with the new API. We've communicated directly with developers whose apps will be affected — via emails, blog posts, alerts on their Developer Dashboards, banners and FAQs on our Developer Site, and 1:1 conversations throughout the year.

- To ensure minimal impact for people using Facebook-connected apps, we're rolling out the changes over a few weeks starting on April 30.
- Resources:
 - Here's the blog post from when we announced these changes in 2014. And here's one that we posted this week letting developers know what to expect.
 - Here are just a few of the things we've done to provide developers reminders, tools and best practices to help them upgrade.

Subject: Migration Follow-up

Hi JP -

Congrats on the successful whiteboard! The results confirm the importance of educating reporters in advance of complex developer updates.

Wanted to check on a couple of items:

Blog Post – We agree on forgoing a blog or any proactive outreach

Backlash – In preparation of backlash from developers who are negatively impacted by the change, recommend having a few positive/happy developers (Runtastic) in our back pocket who can neutralize this for us in the media; also recommend having a reactive statement on hand should we need it (see draft below). We'll keep a close on coverage, Hacker News and social channels and flag if this starts to bubble up (Josh's piece from today elicited some less than positive comments from readers)

Draft Statement:

"Our goal with the Login changes is to give people more control over the information they share with apps. Making people's experiences better will ultimately prove beneficial for users as well as developers."

If more content is needed:

"We spent the last year providing developers feedback on how their apps will perform to ensure minimal user impact. So far, the conversion rate on people logging in with the new Login versus the previous version of Login has increased 11 percent, which indicates that people increasingly feel comfortable logging in with Facebook."

Let us know if you have any questions or need anything else!

Hi JP and Eliza – Know we're full steam ahead with the 4/30 migration but following our conversation below about putting our Entrepreneur byline on hold until after F8, we went ahead and edited the article so that new tools and features announced at F8 are included.

Quick question – we took a look at the Showcase website and noticed there weren't any updated examples to incorporate in our article. Do you know if there are any newer examples we can reference in this article?

In terms of next steps, we've reached out to the Entrepreneur contributor to confirm his interest. If he for some reason is no longer able to accept this, we will shop the article around elsewhere. Below, we've bulleted key edits made throughout; let us know if you have any additional thoughts/edits:

- Updated the 1.4M apps available in Google Play based on a new Statista entry. There weren't anymore recent updates to Apple's numbers (presume this is because Google Play has already surpassed them and they probably don't want to keep rubbing that fact in)
- Took out Parse analytics and incorporated more background on Analytics for Apps instead since that was introduced at F8.
- Added in a reference to the Messenger Platform, in addition to Open Graph and Share Dialogue in the "Expansion through Social" section (We originally called this "Expansion through Social Sharing, but I think it makes more sense to keep it at Social so we can include reference to Messenger)
- Added in some social plugin language in the "Expansion through Social" section per F8

Let us know if you have any questions. Thanks!

Thanks, Kacie! Yes, I agree we should table until after F8 — because, although the topic of “How to build an app using FB” is pretty evergreen, my sense is that we’ll have more new/different/valuable tips for developers after the announcements of F8 go public.

Let’s save the draft you guys put together, and tweak/repurpose when we’re ready!

Thx,
Johanna

Hi JP and Eliza – Thank you so much for your input on the Entrepreneur byline. In light of Eliza’s feedback to incorporate a reference to the app events/app insights, which will change at F8 along with other products, we recommend tabling this until after the event ends, in March. This will also allow us to continue the news momentum, following F8.

Please feel free to let us know if you have any other thoughts. Otherwise, we will provide the reporter with an update on timing. Thanks!

Best,
Kacie

Hi JP – Thanks again to you and the team for all of your insights listed out below. Please find attached the first draft of our Entrepreneur byline ready for your review. In terms of next steps, once we get your green light, we will go ahead and share this with the reporter (Eric) to see how he feels about the content. From there, we can determine best next steps for infographic development to supplement this blog post.

In addition, we saw the TIME cover that appeared! It looked fabulous! With that said, know you mentioned we wanted to hold on Forbes until it appeared, so wanted to gauge your interest in picking this back up again with Ben.

Looking forward to your thoughts! Thanks.

Best,
Kacie

Hi Kacie,

It's the Internet.org team who's working on the TIME piece. Not sure which reporter, but I know it's been in the works for quite a while. Should be a good one!

Thanks,
Johanna

Thank you so much for all of this helpful information! Eliza, I don't think I saw the deck come through that you mentioned. I'll get going on the draft for Entrepreneur and will let you know if I have any questions or need anything else.

Also, who are you working with at TIME on FB's efforts in emerging markets? Sounds like a cool opportunity. I'll let Ben know we can re-visit in the next couple of months when we have more to share.

Thanks!
Kacie

Thanks, Kacie! Great to meet you last week, too.

For the Forbes opportunity, let's hold off for now. I've been in touch with the Internet.org team and they're working on a major feature with TIME focusing on FB's efforts in emerging markets, timed for early Dec, so they're very sensitive to any press about that topic right now. So in order to avoid overlapping with their messaging, we're holding off on telling the Platform emerging markets story until early in the new year. We can definitely let Ben know that we'll keep him posted when we have more to share, though!

For the Entrepreneur piece, sounds like a great opportunity. There's a repository of developer case studies here, and there are also some good ones in the attached doc under the "examples" section. Know he's focused on how to make an app profitable, but would be great if we can get him to incorporate tips on the whole app lifecycle more broadly — Build/Grow/Monetize — without being too promotional, of course ;) We should definitely mention Audience Network since that's a direct monetization tool. Would you be able to sketch out a rough outline of tips we might be able to include, and then Eliza & I can help to edit and narrow down? If you don't have enough to work with in these case studies, or need more info, happy to chat!

Thanks,

Johanna

Hi Johanna and Eliza -

It was a pleasure to meet you both last week in-person! As a follow-up to our meeting, I'd love to get started on the two pending story opportunities for both Entrepreneur and Forbes while we have confirmed interest.

Below, I've provided more details on the storylines, with some suggested next steps. Let me know if you have any questions!

Thanks,
Kacie

Overview of Ideas:

- Entrepreneur, Eric Siu – Eric would like us to draft a blog post with a supplementary infographic that would outline the “Top 10 ways to build a highly profitable app using Facebook.” The article would be authored by him, but we would have control over editorial direction, which is great for us! He's flexible on the timeline, but the sooner the better :) Here's the landing page to his articles so you can get a sense for his style of writing: <http://www.entrepreneur.com/article/232457>
 - Next Steps:
 - Is there a list of case studies that list out some of the best ways to leverage the Facebook platform for applications to gain profit?
 - If not, it'd be great if we could set up a few calls with three separate for-profit apps that have built on the Facebook platform. I'm happy to reach out and interview them to absorb some of their top tips and draft up an article for review/internal approval.
- Forbes, Ben Kepes – Interested in doing a story about how Facebook is enabling entrepreneurs in emerging countries to accelerate the creation of and/or contribution to more robust vertical markets (i.e. Healthcare, banking, education, real-estate, etc.). For example, we talked about Lenddo during our meeting last week, which is a social finance start-up within the Omidyar Network. Lenddo announced its Facebook app (WIRED article for more third-party perspective) to make personal finance information more easily accessible to local banking institutions at the user's convenience – essentially helping people in emerging markets prove their identity and trustworthiness to get real-time loans from local financial institutions. This is an example of how Facebook is providing a platform on which to build platforms that accelerate successful vertical market growth.
 - Assets needed:
 - A strong case study around an app that developers have built to facilitate accelerate growth in vertical market production
 - Statistics to share on insights in emerging markets
- He's also interested in the following to supplement the above story, which I know is in the works right now: A Heat Map to showcase app trends we're seeing internationally. Depending on the app story we decide to feature, we can potentially break this down by total amounts of apps created in various countries, how app developers are building apps for developing countries (i.e. Nuances, tips or considerations), the types of apps that are being created (i.e. Games, services, etc.)
 - Next Steps:
 - Option #1: Are there any upcoming social good app launches that target the developing world coming up that we might be able to use and exclusive for?
 - Option #2: I could always reach out to Lenddo since I know the CEO well and Ben's already familiar with it. I can try to get an update on their user numbers to see how successful they've become with the use of the Facebook platform. Or perhaps they could source an inspirational story that could feature an entrepreneur that was able to get their business up and running fast with the help of getting a quick loan via Facebook. This storyline could also tie in the Internet.org storyline.
 - Option #3: We could feature one of the apps in this list and offer Ben an overview of how they got started and the types of results they're seeing since they decided to build their app on Facebook.

“Top 5 Ways to Build a Successful App On Facebook”

By Eric Siu, Entrepreneur

Introduction:

There are over 1.4M apps available in Google Play and 1.2M apps available in the Apple App Store (source: Statista; 2015 and Statista; 2014). So, how can your app break through the noise and reach the right person, and ultimately make money?

The proliferation of the app marketplace is why digital platforms are taking a lead on the mobile app development runway. Facebook, for example, has an existing global audience of 1.3B users so integrating a platform that already has a massive following is not a bad idea for today's app developers. But as we're seeing more and more new devices roll out, developers are a bit perplexed about how to build their app so it leverages the best tools out there and maintain cross-platform compatibility.

We've done the homework for you and included below some expert tips from a handful of Facebook's successful applications to find out exactly what that special sauce is made of when it comes to monetizing your apps on Facebook, and ultimately making them a hit with consumers on multiple devices.

1.) Go Cross-platform

There's no question that we're living in a platform-dominated world. People want access at any given moment, whether they're at home, in the office or on-the-go. As more and more people gravitate toward a mobile-centric world, it will be imperative that your app be platform agnostic, and accessible via desktop or mobile; Android or iOS.

Throne Rush, for example, is a real-time military strategy game that was built on Facebook and only three months after the Facebook and mobile launch, Throne Rush revenue hit $100K per day. One of the ways they were able to hit these revenue numbers was by synchronizing the Facebook version of the app with iOS and Android. This allowed them to facilitate a 25% increase in Facebook loyal player-base by using Facebook Login. The number of paying consumers among cross-platform players is 4X higher for Throne Rush.

Another example is King's casual game Candy Crush Saga, which was ranked as the most popular game on Facebook's Top Rated Social Games of 2012. Going cross-platform was key for Candy Crush Saga because it was able to leverage its existing user-base on Facebook to drive adoption and more engagement when King launched the mobile versions.

The app also found that mobile consumers who already played on their desktop would get bookmarks, Open Graph stories and notifications on their Facebook native app. As a result, Candy Crush Saga scored more users earlier than they would have without the extra help; mobile and desktop users are almost twice as engaged as single platform users.

2.) Make the Sign-up Process Simple

Another thing to keep in mind when you develop your app, especially when it's new and you have no existing user-base, is to make your sign-up process very simple. If people need to go through three steps that require added layers of data (email and passwords), they often lose interest and never come back. This is exactly what initially happened to Foursquare when it went mobile, and they found themselves with a conversion rate of 60%.

They switched their original three-step process over to one-click signup with Facebook Login. This means that potential users were able to authenticate Foursquare with their Facebook account – making them a Foursquare user in one step without any further information needed. As a result, the new user conversion rate jumped to 90%.

3.) Expansion through Social

Let's face it, when it comes to mobile, the bottom line is that people ultimately want to feel connected with one another. The collaboration builds a sense of camaraderie and helps make ideas stronger. Tools like the new Messenger Platform – with its 600 million existing users – bring growth and engagement opportunities to developers. Here, people can better express themselves with GIFs, photos, videos, audio clips and more, as opposed to informal calls or emails.

Also, Facebook offers social plugins with a single line of HTML, so you can easily integrate collaborative tools that people are already used to using like the Like button, Share button, comments, embedded posts and a comments box to continue the conversation outside of your app.

There are also tools like Open Graph and Share Dialogue, which allows users to make friends and keep that friendly dialogue consistent and most importantly - embedded onto your app.

Candy Crush Saga enables their players to share progress and achievements via Open Graph stories when they pass a friend's level or beat their score. Even reengagement was proving to be successful through the extra lives and boosters that players could share with each other.

4.) Target the Right People

Building a robust audience is important, but what's even more important is that you build a relevant audience to test and evaluate the game.

955 Dreams launched Applauze, a ticketing app, in March 2013 and experimented with Facebook's mobile app ads, with a budget of only $200.

Their experiment resulted in a 10X higher click-through rate and a 50% lower cost per install compared to other mobile consumer acquisition platforms, making Facebook its top-returning channel.

Here's how they did it:

- Leveraged high-quality images and experimented with a mix of broad and narrow targeting. The app targeted various demographics and incorporated copy that was tailored to the specific demographic. For example, "Plan a great night out in Chicago, in seconds with Applauze."
- Refreshed ad copy regularly to avoid coming across to potential users as stereotypical ad, and referenced specific activities going on in that particular region. For example, "From art crawls to the championship game, find out what's going on near you."
- Presented a call-to-action in its posts, such as "Get tickets to your favorite bands in seconds from Applauze."
- Used Power Editor, a bulk ad-uploading tool, and Facebook's software development kit to track app performance. This allowed 955 Dreams to own all mobile app ad campaign management.
- Incorporated app performance insights to shift its focus and optimize accordingly for return on investment rather than cost-per-install (CPI). As a result, its return on investment rose at more than double the CPI rate.

5.) Track your App's Performance

Knowing how your app is performing is crucial, and even more crucial is having a deep understanding around why your app is performing a certain way. Facebook recently announced Analytics for Apps at F8, its annual developer conference, which is a free cross-device tool that makes it simple for developers to understand things like, "what percentage of the people in Canada that installed my mobile app ended up purchasing on my website?"

With this helpful tool, you can now understand exactly who your audience is and how to better engage them. For example, you'll be able know how people are navigating through your app and where they tend to drop off, specific breakdowns of people using your app by age, gender, country and language, and the value of your lifetime network or campaign.

Conclusion:

App development is an exciting way to create something that you want to share with the world, and with the right tools and support, developers can often build an influential piece of the business world puzzle and make money while doing it. Facebook is a developer's best friend when used properly because it provides all the tools you need to build, grow and monetize an app of any size and idea.

>I'd ditch numbering and "Insights."

Douglas Purdy:
>Insights is key to growth. I think every developer tells us that.

Douglas Purdy:
>how to we express that here?

Michael Vernal:
>No, Insights suck - every developer tells us that.

Michael Vernal:
>Insights isn't a feature of your platform. It's table stakes.

Michael Vernal:
>Maybe one day it can be value-add, but for now I think it's just table stakes.

Douglas Purdy:
>yes, of course, this is for zuck.

Douglas Purdy:
>he needs to understand this.

Michael Vernal:
>No he doesn't.

Michael Vernal:
>I'd ditch Insights.

Douglas Purdy:
>this is exactly what i am talking about.

Michael Vernal:
>He gets that we need to invest in Insights. We spent 15 minutes talking about why Insights sucks today.

Michael Vernal:

>I just don't think it's part of the pillars.

Michael Vernal:

>Whenever we have a pillar, we have the desire to put stuff in the pillar to make things filled-out. I want to resist that.

Douglas Purdy:

>i think you talking about that with zuck is germane.

Douglas Purdy:

>for this deck.

Michael Vernal:

>I really don't.

Douglas Purdy:

>sorry.

Michael Vernal:

>I really don't want Insights in grow. It weakens the entire deck.

Douglas Purdy:

>we are miscommunicating.

Michael Vernal:

>Ok

Douglas Purdy:

>i am making an statement about your continued inability to share your zuck conversations with the people doing the work.

Michael Vernal:

>I don't know why I should.

Michael Vernal:

>I own platform, not Makr.

Michael Vernal:

>Mark is trying to delegate this stuff to me. Mark is not making decisions here.

Douglas Purdy:

>you just can't say. hey that isn't a pillar. i talked to mark about it today as a way to shutdown the converastion then.

Michael Vernal:

>That's not what I said --

Douglas Purdy:

>that is what i heard.

Michael Vernal:

>Ok. What I said was:

>

>Insights isn't a feature of your platform. It's table stakes.

>
>Maybe one day it can be value-add, but for now I think it's just table stakes.
>
>You then said "it needs to be in there for Zuck."
>
>And I said, no it doesn't.

Michael Vernal:

>You were the one who brought in Mark.

Douglas Purdy:

>yes and i still believe that.

Michael Vernal:

>Why? Can you help me understand why it needs to be there for Mark?

Douglas Purdy:

>because i am not convinced that he is signed up for all this and that is my biggest worry.

Michael Vernal:

>All of what?

Michael Vernal:

>What are you asking him to sign-up for by putting Insights in there?

Douglas Purdy:

>i have watched him cut insights roughly 3 times if memory serves.

Michael Vernal:

>I asked for +2 engineers for Insights, and he gave them for this half. That takes us to 4.

>

>Do we need more engineers for this half?

Michael Vernal:

>This is just a very odd stand to be taking on a strategic slide.

Douglas Purdy:

>i was all worked up to work on these slides, but this exchange is a little draining.

Michael Vernal:

>Sorry. :(

Michael Vernal:

>Ok - we can drop it.

Michael Vernal:

>My net is "less is more."

Douglas Purdy:

>no this kind of exchange is exactly what i have hated about this whole thing.

Douglas Purdy:

>if i want to tell the ceo that i think something is important.

Douglas Purdy:

>i should be able to do that.

Douglas Purdy:

>if i can't.

Douglas Purdy:

>i don't know what i am doing here any longer.

Michael Vernal:

>i'm not sure this is a constructive debate.

Michael Vernal:

>i'm obviously not telling you that you can't tell Mark Insights is important.

Douglas Purdy:

>yes, you do.

Michael Vernal:

>i'm telling you that you're conflating a tactical concern (whether Insights has staffing) with a strategic slide (what Platform is).

Douglas Purdy:

>i wasn't.

Michael Vernal:

>It would be like putting "testing" on this slide. Does platform need testing? Yes. Is platform defined by testing? No.

Douglas Purdy:

>i didn't say thing about staffing. you did.

Douglas Purdy:

>it isn't about staffing per se.

Douglas Purdy:

>it is that measurement is important to developers.

Douglas Purdy:

>more important than games engines.

Michael Vernal:

>So being able to measure building stuff isn't important?

Michael Vernal:

>Being able to measure monetizing stuff isn't important?

Michael Vernal:

>It's only about measuring growth?

Douglas Purdy:

>build, no. money, yes. if zuck want to buy someone he should be looking at insight companies -- in fact, it is a our biggest strategic hole.

Michael Vernal:

>Why would Zuck look to buy someone?

Michael Vernal:

>Instead of Platform?

Michael Vernal:

>This whole conversation is odd to me.

Douglas Purdy:

>we aren't on the same page on a bunch of different things because we don't take.

Douglas Purdy:

>talk.

Douglas Purdy:

>insights doesn't need +2 people.

Douglas Purdy:

>it needs +10 or so. :-)

Douglas Purdy:

>if not more.

Douglas Purdy:

>just giving you my honest opinion for once.

Douglas Purdy:

>some this may be atypical.

Michael Vernal:

>What Insights needs is a dedicated PM and a plan.

Douglas Purdy:

>so this may be atypical behavior. :-)

Michael Vernal:

>Then we could staff it up.

Douglas Purdy:

>People need to know it is important first.

Douglas Purdy:

>look at what the ads team did here.

Michael Vernal:

>Yes, I know what they did. They put a good PM on it, and it got done.

Michael Vernal:

>I have begged forever - for years and years - for someone to come up with a reasonable spec for this thing.

Michael Vernal:

>I have offered multiple times to do it myself.

Douglas Purdy:

>no one has time.

Michael Vernal:

>Don't you manage the PM team? Isn't this a problem you can solve

Michael Vernal:

>?

Michael Vernal:

>Did you not have enough PMs?

Douglas Purdy:

>No. You cut insights.

Douglas Purdy:

>people watched you do it.

Douglas Purdy:

>and then backpedal.

Douglas Purdy:

>no one thinks it is important.

Douglas Purdy:

>because you don't think it is important.

Michael Vernal:

>No, I actually think it's really important.

Michael Vernal:

>I have no confidence in my team to be able to build it. That's different.

Michael Vernal:

>I was sick of throwing good money after bad money.

Douglas Purdy:

>that is a good story. i think you should ask people what they think. in my first conversation with you at the tofu house you said "insights isn't strategic for us" (that was in 2009). i haven't forgotten that because every action i have seen backs it up.

Michael Vernal:

>I understand people's impressions may be different than my underlying intent.

>

>I'm not sure this is that important to debate. I'm not sure what result you're trying to achieve.

Michael Vernal:

>If you're arguing for us building out Parse Analytics - I'm all for it. I'm happy to +10 that with engineers.

Douglas Purdy:

>yes.

Douglas Purdy:

>that is what i am arguing.

Michael Vernal:

>Ok. Yeah. I think there are two strategic pieces of Parse - data storage and analytics.

Douglas Purdy:

>ok, now we are talking.

Michael Vernal:

>Yeah, I agree. I think that's just part of Parse.

Douglas Purdy:

>all communication.

Michael Vernal:

>You shouldn't confuse my profound disappointment with my team's inability to tackle a simple problem like Insights with me being confused about the importance of measurement.

Douglas Purdy:

>i am telling you they are the same.

Michael Vernal:

>I understand what you're saying.

Michael Vernal:

>I have learned that we are completely incompetent when it comes to measuring our own shit.

Michael Vernal:

>We're just incompetent. We take competent people, deploy them at this problem, and we get incompetence.

Michael Vernal:

>This is not important. I agree we should staff-up Parse Analytics in the limit. I would put that under Build.

Douglas Purdy:

>lol.

Douglas Purdy:

>that ok?

Douglas Purdy attached 1208602_10151884577547160_2109275968_n.jpg

Douglas Purdy:

>ok can just be parse and speak to it.

Michael Vernal:

>Why can't this just be "Parse, Login, Sharing, Canvas", with Grow as "Ads, Mobile Publishing," and Monetize as "Payments, Ad Network?" I guess we can keep App Store in there.

Michael Vernal:

>I was trying to figure out why the above message thread bothered me, and I think I figured it out:

Douglas Purdy:

>?

Michael Vernal:

>I tried to give this to you to run with. I tried not to be that hands-on.

>

>You told me you were leaving and, to be frank, I don't think this stuff is going that well at the moment.

>

>I'm pretty stressed out and working as hard as I can to get this into better shape and to own this message to Mark now, because ... well, I do. My attempt at delegation failed, as you're leaving.

>

>Your comment above about being able to say this directly to the CEO is what irked me -- due respect, you had that opportunity. I was not driving this. I'm stuck driving this now (not by my choice), and so I just don't want to be damned-if-I-do, damned-if-I-don't.

Douglas Purdy:

>I never had this opportunity. i think that is where you are way off.

Michael Vernal:

>Why not?

Douglas Purdy:

>no one understand what happened.

Douglas Purdy:

>no one.

Douglas Purdy:

>you woke up thursday and started making decisions that everyone has been waiting on forever.

Douglas Purdy:

>eddie was still in shock today.

Michael Vernal:

>You never had this opportunity because you and/or Vlad were never really empowered here?

Michael Vernal:

>What could I have done to empower you?

Douglas Purdy:

>no one feels empowered.

Douglas Purdy:

>ask around.

Michael Vernal:

>Ok, my bad. This is not a fruitful conversation.

Michael Vernal:

>We're both frustrated, for different reasons.

Douglas Purdy:

>i was happy until you told me i couldnt have insights on the slide.

Michael Vernal:

>Douglas M. Purdy: "Himel: I agree that we need to talk about analytics. I think this is core to all three pillars (build, grow and monetize). "

Douglas Purdy:

>sounds like me.

Douglas Purdy:

>i put it in grow to balance it out. with the other pillars.

Michael Vernal:

>I KNOW

Douglas Purdy:

>is there a reason you are yelling?

Michael Vernal:

>"Perfection is achieved perfection not when there is nothing left to add, but when there is nothing left to take away."

Douglas Purdy:

>really?

Michael Vernal:

>I actually think we have a really crisp message with:

Michael Vernal:

>- Build: Parse, Login, Share

>- Grow: Ads, Publishing

>- Monetize: Payments, Ad Network

Douglas Purdy:

>you need canvas there.

Douglas Purdy:

>forget it.

Douglas Purdy:

>i am just going to type whatever you want.

Douglas Purdy:

>that is what you want from someone that works for you and that is what i am going to do. that is my way of yelling. :-)

Michael Vernal:

>There are lots of unproductive conversations going on in parallel here.

Douglas Purdy attached 1208667_10151884598897160_963455386_n.jpg

Michael Vernal:

>That sounds fine; we can hash out this level of detail tomorrow.

Michael Vernal:

>With due respect, though, I now reluctantly own this. I didn't want to own this, but I do. So I understand you're frustrated because you perceive me as telling you what you can and cannot say to "the CEO."

Douglas Purdy:

>i am frustrated that after 3 years of everyone and their mother telling you how to fix things you are finally doing it, but saying that you reluctantly own it as if everyone else fucked up.

Douglas Purdy:

>you NEVER put me in a position to fix this.

Douglas Purdy:

>NEVER.

Douglas Purdy:

>that is me yelling now.

Douglas Purdy:

>and never after I told you i was thinking about leaving, you never did.

Michael Vernal:

>And what would I have done to put you in a position to fix this?

Michael Vernal:

>Fired Vlad? Made him report to you? Something else?

Douglas Purdy:

>I would have held the engineering teams accountable for the engineering debt we have. that would have lead to a draw down to the sustainable parts of platform (see the draw down after WWII and the Cold War), win back trust and then see how we could apply our user infrastructure assets to this space.

Douglas Purdy:

>I can't hold anyone in engineering accountable for anything.

Michael Vernal:

>Why not?

Douglas Purdy:

>i can't even hold my own pms accountable for anything.

Douglas Purdy:

>everyone works for you.

Michael Vernal:

>Why not?

Douglas Purdy:
>no one is confused.

Douglas Purdy:
>Now you want SLA, we get SLAs.

Douglas Purdy:
>Well, until Vlad gets back.

Douglas Purdy:
>then who knows. :-)

Douglas Purdy:
>anyway, this doesn't matter.

Michael Vernal:
>Ok. I don't know how to act on any of this.

Michael Vernal:
>I guess I just have to micro-manage everything everywhere, because I can't empower anyone else to make decisions?

Douglas Purdy:
>that is exactly right.

Michael Vernal:
>No, it's not. It's bullshit.

Michael Vernal:
>It really is bullshit. It's insulting.

Douglas Purdy:
>ok.

Douglas Purdy:
>i am just telling you what people tell me.

Douglas Purdy:
>and how i feel all the time too.

Douglas Purdy:
>you can call that bullshit.

Michael Vernal:
>I understand. I think it's just a facile argument.

Michael Vernal:
>To micro-manage, I have to know what teams are doing.

Douglas Purdy:
>mike, i really, really think you are lacking in self-awareness here.

Michael Vernal:

>I have no idea what the API team, the SDK team, the Integrity team, the Tools team, etc. are doing. I've seen an update every so often on Hendrix (why are we doing this? who is driving? I have no idea).

Michael Vernal:

>I've been completely hands-off. If that meant these teams couldn't do any useful work, it was your job and Vlad's job to flag that for me. I left you guys to manage all of our Developer Platform efforts.

Douglas Purdy:

>sorry. i am the PM for all of Platform.

Michael Vernal:

>You told me you were leaving, I felt like the P3.0 was not converging, and I got more hands-on to try to break the log-jam.

Douglas Purdy:

>the log-jam is of your own making.

Michael Vernal:

>Yes. I tried to empower you and Vlad, and I failed.

Michael Vernal:

>I get that. I get that I failed.

Douglas Purdy:

>you can't empower two people.

Douglas Purdy:

>for the same thing.

Michael Vernal:

>No, you can.

Michael Vernal:

>You just can't work w/ Vlad. They're different.

Douglas Purdy:

>wrong.

Douglas Purdy:

>vlad can't work with anyone.

Douglas Purdy:

>that phrasing you used says it all.

Michael Vernal:

>Well, I asked you earlier - how would you have fixed it? Fired Vlad?

Michael Vernal:

>Moved him to another team?

Michael Vernal:

>Could you have worked with another eng lead as the PM lead to get a reasonable outcome?

Douglas Purdy:
>P3.0 was wrong.

Douglas Purdy:
>it is getting fixed now.

Douglas Purdy:
>i felt no power to fix it before.

Douglas Purdy:
>i do now.

Michael Vernal:
>Because of me? Or Vlad?

Douglas Purdy:
>so i'll help.

Michael Vernal:
>Here's why I'm asking - I am actually trying to learn from this.

Douglas Purdy:
>i don't even want to be in the same room as vlad on most days.

Michael Vernal:
>Ok. So if you had a different eng lead, you could have done this from PM?

Douglas Purdy:
>Unclear. If I was running all of Platform doing the stable core would have been the first thing and all the P3 stuff flows from it.

Douglas Purdy:
>all hindsight.

Michael Vernal:
>You just believe the entire functional model is fucked?

Michael Vernal:
>You'd have PUMs all the way down?

Douglas Purdy:
>I would have PUMs for units of strategy.

Douglas Purdy:
>Platform is a unit of strategy.

Douglas Purdy:
>either you lead

Douglas Purdy:
>or I do.

Michael Vernal:

>What would your PM lead do?

Douglas Purdy:

>for me, chief of staff.

Douglas Purdy:

>i am not saying your model is wrong, but it is wrong for me.

Michael Vernal:

>So you could never have done the PM lead role?

Douglas Purdy:

>i have been telling you that for months and months, months.

Michael Vernal:

>Fine - fair.

Douglas Purdy:

>i have been that role a bunch of times in my career. not particularly interesting, but i would do it for a friend if i thought they would get me to good spot. ;-)

Douglas Purdy:

>how is that for guilt.

Douglas Purdy:

>:-)

Michael Vernal:

>Well, I tried. We both failed.

Douglas Purdy:

>i don't think you tired.

Douglas Purdy:

>tried.

Douglas Purdy:

>but that is ok.

Douglas Purdy:

>i understand.

Michael Vernal:

>I did everything but fire Vlad.

Douglas Purdy:

>you shouldn't have to have fired vlad. but you could have gotten me another role at fb.

Michael Vernal:

>There are really only two explanations here (and maybe some spectrum in between):

>
>1. I empowered you + Vlad, but you guys couldn't work together so we didn't make progress
>
>2. I didn't actually empower you guys
>
>I really tried to do 1 and, frankly, I think I mostly did.

Douglas Purdy:
>i would have stayed if it was compelling enough.

Douglas Purdy:
>i question the entire frame you used.

Douglas Purdy:
>btw.

Douglas Purdy:
>which i think is the problem.

Michael Vernal:
>If you can, I would really appreciate an answer to the following:
>
>- Did I fail to empower you and Vlad to own this, or
>
>- Did I succeed in empowering you, but because you couldn't work together you couldn't make progress.
>
>If Alex was the eng leader instead of Vlad, would it have been a different outcome?
>
>You're leaving, so this isn't about saving you. I'm trying to understand if:
>
>- I failed to delegate + empower
>
>- I succeeded, but no one can work with Vlad
>
>- I succeeded, but you need to have total control to be empowered

Michael Vernal:
>Ok, what's the right frame?

Douglas Purdy:
>I am director of product on platform. who is my peer?

Douglas Purdy:
>where is he or she?

Michael Vernal:
>Is the issue I didn't stick everyone to report to Vlad?

Douglas Purdy:
>i would have left quicker.

Michael Vernal:

>Or that I didn't rip Rose/Avichal out and have them report to me directly?

Douglas Purdy:

>if you want to run a functional org run one.

Douglas Purdy:

>you run an org where you control all the eng yourself and send specs to all the PMs.

Douglas Purdy:

>and design.

Douglas Purdy:

>have an effective staff meeting with your three leads.

Douglas Purdy:

>set strategy with those three folks.

Douglas Purdy:

>help them get visibility and growth and experience.

Douglas Purdy:

>with your boss.

Douglas Purdy:

>growth the next set of leaders by have a great review place across all projects.

Douglas Purdy:

>even the ones that are not your favorites.

Douglas Purdy:

>listen

Douglas Purdy:

>listen

Douglas Purdy:

>and listen some more.

Douglas Purdy:

>then ask some questions.

Douglas Purdy:

>then meet with your staff

Douglas Purdy:

>and tell them what act you want taken

Douglas Purdy:

>repeat.

Michael Vernal:

>Well, I think you're going much farther than my question, and telling me how you'd run an org. That may be the only way, but I'm not convinced.

Douglas Purdy:
>you never asked me.

Douglas Purdy:
>only now.

Douglas Purdy:
>that is odd don't you think?

Michael Vernal:
>Here are my takeaways:
>
>1. You didn't want to work with Vlad. I think the point about not having an eng lead is really that you didn't want it to be Vlad (he is the pg-eng-lead here). Got that.
>
>2. I have trouble reconciling the desire for empowerment with the desire for attention from Mark. Mark doesn't give attention as a form of validation. He gives attention to make decisions. Going to Mark means not being empowered to do stuff.

Michael Vernal:
>Re: 2, what I really think you want was the old style of platform (2-3+ years ago) where you were facilitating a PM and some engineers going to Mark to talk about a project. I categorically think that's the wrong model for Facebook, which is why I haven't been taking that approach.

Michael Vernal:
>Because I don't believe you just want to go to Mark to talk to Mark. Because you seem to want to accrue power to disseminate power to the people who report to you.

Douglas Purdy:
>it is not about attention from mark. it is to have a discussion with him about strategy. which i have really had with him twice and the second time, i was telling him i was leaving.

Douglas Purdy:
>i care about strategy with mark.

Douglas Purdy:
>what is important. what is not. how we win.

Michael Vernal:
>Well, you were in at least 10+ conversation with Mark about strategy re: platform 3.0 10-11 months ago.

Douglas Purdy:
>that was a joke.

Michael Vernal:
>Are you counting it, or not?

Douglas Purdy:
>no.

Michael Vernal:

>Ok.

Michael Vernal:

>My real takeaway here - to be blunt - is you didn't want to work for me.

Michael Vernal:

>You wanted to work for me out of a desire to help me.

Douglas Purdy:

>yes.

Douglas Purdy:

>that is exactly right.

Douglas Purdy:

>i told you a million times.

Michael Vernal:

>Well, more like 3-4 times.

Michael Vernal:

>But ok. I get it.

Douglas Purdy:

>that is 3-4 too many.

Michael Vernal:

>Ok, I got it. I spent the past year fighting for space so that we could make sane decisions about the future of platform without external randomizing influences. That was a very conscious decision.

Michael Vernal:

>I realize that's the opposite of what you wanted. You wanted to just go sort out the future of platform with you and an-eng-lead-not-Vlad(?) directly with Mark.

Douglas Purdy:

>i supported you as best i could for as long as i could.

Douglas Purdy:

>still am.

Michael Vernal:

>Yeah, ok, got it.

Michael Vernal:

>Why couldn't you work for me?

Michael Vernal:

>Because I used to report to you?

Douglas Purdy:

>because i don't see the distance between you and me.

Douglas Purdy:

>:-)

Douglas Purdy:

>i am quoting you.

Michael Vernal:

>I know.

Michael Vernal:

>I'm serious - why not?

Douglas Purdy:

>there is nothing for me to do.

Douglas Purdy:

>that i want to do.

Douglas Purdy:

>or want to learn how to do.

Douglas Purdy:

>i know how to run big teams.

Douglas Purdy:

>i have a small team.

Douglas Purdy:

>i know how to speak at company meetings.

Douglas Purdy:

>or in front of thousand and thousands of developers.

Douglas Purdy:

>i can build apis.

Douglas Purdy:

>and tools.

Douglas Purdy:

>...

Michael Vernal:

>And what would have been different had you reported to Mark

Michael Vernal:

>?

Michael Vernal:

>You would have learned strategy from him?

Douglas Purdy:
>i would have hoped.

Douglas Purdy:
>leverage.

Douglas Purdy:
>the guy is a master of leverage.

Douglas Purdy:
>and i could have helped him.

Douglas Purdy:
>i have had two, seriously two, strategy conversations with him.

Douglas Purdy:
>for maybe 30-45 mins total

Douglas Purdy:
>since i have been here.

Douglas Purdy:
>the first was me telling him to kill the html5 stuff for the native mobile platform with OG

Douglas Purdy:
>the second was me telling him we should AWSify Platform, oh and I am leaving now.

Michael Vernal:
>What does it mean to AWSify Platform?

Douglas Purdy:
>the rest of the time i was building Excel configurator or shutting off developers or listening to you talk.

Douglas Purdy:
>the paper i sent around.

Douglas Purdy:
>that is what it means to me.

Douglas Purdy:
>needs the next level of detail.

Douglas Purdy:
>i can't even have a annual dev event without having a conversation with you and then getting frustrated and then having mark ask for an f8. so frustrating.

Douglas Purdy:
>i would have had an f8 every single year since i got here.

Michael Vernal:
>Jesus, really?

Douglas Purdy:

>hell yes.

Douglas Purdy:

>predictable

Michael Vernal:

>Great - well, success - you got your developer event and then exited yourself before the day.

Douglas Purdy:

>that is bullshit. i told you i was leaving before mark sent his note.

Douglas Purdy:

>you knew i was leaving. i asked for leave.

Douglas Purdy:

>i told you i wanted to leave in feb.

Douglas Purdy:

>nothing.

Douglas Purdy:

>i was absolutely certain you wanted me to leave. even anh thought so.

Michael Vernal:

>I think what you said earlier is what's really going on here - I think you convinced yourself that the only way you could work for me is under the premise that you were helping me.

Michael Vernal:

>While that seems altruistic, it's actually a little insulting. It suggests that I haven't earned my position through merit or talent - that our roles should be inverted, but you're helping me out.

Michael Vernal:

>I think it's just an issue of personal relationship - we've known each other for too long to be accurate judges of the other person.

Michael Vernal:

>You think you are better than I think you are, and I think I am better than you think I am.

Douglas Purdy:

>i am fairly well calibrated on how good both of us are.

Douglas Purdy:

>you are really good.

Douglas Purdy:

>i am ok.

Douglas Purdy:

>at FB.

Douglas Purdy:
>much of this is context.

Douglas Purdy:
>you earned your position that is why you have it.

Douglas Purdy:
>and i don't.

Douglas Purdy:
>but don't believe for a second that i felt empowered.

Michael Vernal:
>I'm certain you didn't feel empowered.

Michael Vernal:
>That doesn't mean I didn't empower you.

Douglas Purdy:
>and i think that is the root issue.

Douglas Purdy:
>you know about jim crow laws?

Michael Vernal:
>Really?

Michael Vernal:
>Is that where we're going?

Douglas Purdy:
>i am happy to use another example.

Michael Vernal:
>You never answered this question, so trying again: was it Vlad or me?

Douglas Purdy:
>it was me.

Michael Vernal:
>Would my attempts at empowerment have worked if your eng lead had been Alex?

Michael Vernal:
>No, seriously - Vlad or mE?

Michael Vernal:
>_None_ of this is to get you to stay. Everyone has accepted you're leaving. Done deal. This is honestly to help me learn.
>
>Next time I have three options:
>
>- Empower Doug' in the same way again, with a different eng lead

>
>- Fight to only hire Doug' as a pseudo-PG lead
>
>- Don't hire Doug'
>
>Which should I do? Can I get away with (1)?

Douglas Purdy:
>if you and i would have been peers this could have worked, maybe.

Douglas Purdy:
>so i think it is #3. i should have left when bret did.

Douglas Purdy:
>i really really want to work with brad and you.

Douglas Purdy:
>bret and you.

Douglas Purdy:
>that is what i wanted when you guys hired carl.

Douglas Purdy:
>and then i got it when carl left

Douglas Purdy:
>but i'll never forget our first review with bret. the dev tools team did some basic work to clean up the OG tool before the big refactor you want to do and you said, "this is all wrong". i said, "i went through the tool and it helps a real dev". you said, "i don't care, we worked for months on this model and this doesn't help. i said, "it does, i wrote some code and used to the tool". i knew then this isn't going to end the way i wanted.

Michael Vernal:
>Is this what Cat presented?

Douglas Purdy:
>yes and alan.

Douglas Purdy:
>first time to bret.

Douglas Purdy:
>for both of them.

Douglas Purdy:
>big deal.

Douglas Purdy:
>for them.

Douglas Purdy:
>complete clusterfuck

Douglas Purdy:

>Not one bit of consideration for the team's work or my opinion.

Douglas Purdy:

>sorry. i am angry now.

>

Douglas Purdy:

>but this is exactly the conversation we should have been having.

>

Michael Vernal:

>Yeah, I think it's late and probably no longer a productive conversation.

>

>I am sorry I hurt the team's feelings - it was not my intent. It was also 18+ months ago.

Douglas Purdy:

>and we didn't.

Michael Vernal:

>Well, it's an awkward conversation - the net was that you didn't want to work for me.

Michael Vernal:

>I'm sorry we didn't have it - I could have tried to find you a different role at FB.

Douglas Purdy:

>the net was you didn't want me to work for you. you know what i am good at and you didn't let me do it. that is how i feel. really.

Douglas Purdy:

>i even asked you what i was good at.

Douglas Purdy:

>you didn't even think to apply that to our conversation

Douglas Purdy:

>really dude, i told you exactly what you need to do.

Douglas Purdy:

>it isn't about working for you.

Douglas Purdy:

>it is about letting me do the things i am good at and want to learn from.

Douglas Purdy:

>i would work for the janitor if that was all true.

Douglas Purdy:

>so i think you have been miss the point with this vlad or me or whatever. what am i good and could i do it?

Douglas Purdy:

>that is all that matters.

Douglas Purdy:

>so when i say distance, i don't think either one of us should work for the other. just on different things.

Douglas Purdy:

>what is insulting is when you said i had "accepted my role".

Douglas Purdy:

>i want to build and lead teams that do great things and really grow together in the process.

Michael Vernal:

>You want to be a PUM.

Douglas Purdy:

>and inspire people.

Douglas Purdy:

>i just want to do my best work.

Michael Vernal:

>You want to be a PUM, yes?

Douglas Purdy:

>i don't know what that means.

Douglas Purdy:

>i was one.

Michael Vernal:

>You're the one who introduced the language.

Douglas Purdy:

>i don't want to be one again.

Michael Vernal:

>Why not? Because you have so mastered the craft of being a PUM, that you have nothing left to learn?

Michael Vernal:

>Can I be blunt?

Douglas Purdy:

>of course.

Douglas Purdy:

>i haven't mastered anything that i am aware of.

Michael Vernal:

>No, I'll pass - it's late. Let's just sync-up tomorrow.

Douglas Purdy:

>you can't throw that out and take it back.

Douglas Purdy:
>talk about bullshit. :-)

Michael Vernal:
>I think you lack humility and self-awareness about your own talent level.
>
>I think you are very talented, but I don't think you're as talented as you think (in your heart) you are.
>
>I think the fact that you say things like:
>
>"i don't know what that means."
>
>"i was one."
>
>"i don't want to be one again."
>
>Is evidence of that.
>
>You can't credibly say that you'll work for the janitor, but that you don't want to be a PUM again (after spending two hours arguing to me basically why you needed to be a PUM, "running a unit of strategy," to be happy).

Douglas Purdy:
>like all things, i think we are miscommunicating. I think you introduced PUM (i'll scroll back up), i just said PUMs should be units of strategy not all the way down. also, my point wasn't about who i worked for, it was what i am good at. can you honestly tell me that you have used me in the most effective way (knowing my skills) to further the ends of our developers, shareholders, etc. and made sure that i had all the right opportunities (and support) to grow? that is the only question.

Michael Vernal:
>I tried to get your self-reported place of optimality, but I failed.

Michael Vernal:
>The path was leading the platform stuff, with Vlad as your counterpart, but I either failed to clearly communicate this, or you were unable to work with Vlad, or both.

Douglas Purdy:
>that wasn't a viable path.

Michael Vernal:
>This isn't a useful conversation, because this is in the past and you are leaving. The real question for me is to how to avoid this in the future.

Douglas Purdy:
>that was expedient.

Michael Vernal:
>What was another path?

Douglas Purdy:
>that is what i am trying to explain.

Douglas Purdy:

>you could have hired an engineering manager. you could have told me to hire another PM lead.

Douglas Purdy:

>you could have made me a real product director at FB.

Douglas Purdy:

>there were so, so many things i would have tried if i was in your position.

Michael Vernal:

>I hired you an engineering manager - you didn't want him.

Douglas Purdy:

>what!

Douglas Purdy:

>who?

Michael Vernal:

>This is all a you + Vlad issue. you guys couldnt' work together, and I should have accepted that earlier.

Michael Vernal:

>That's fine - I get it. That's my main learning from all of this - you + Vlad weren't a good match.

Douglas Purdy:

>you are missing the point again.

Douglas Purdy:

>but ok

Douglas Purdy:

>i tired again.

Michael Vernal:

>Ok, what does it mean to "hire an engineering manager"?

Douglas Purdy:

>hiring an engineering director.

Michael Vernal:

>Someone to manage all the engineering teams?

Douglas Purdy:

>vlad is not an engineering director

Douglas Purdy:

>he is not.

Douglas Purdy:

>i don't know what he is.

Douglas Purdy:

>but he is not a engineering manager.

Douglas Purdy:
>director.

Michael Vernal:
>That's not fair.

Douglas Purdy:
>it is completely fair.

Michael Vernal:
>This is not useful. You are blaming other people for what you were in control of.

Michael Vernal:
>That's what it really comes down to, to be blunt.

Douglas Purdy:
>ok.

Douglas Purdy:
>i am trying to help you.

Michael Vernal:
>I should have taken Rose as a direct report and then called this done.

Douglas Purdy:
>ok.

Douglas Purdy:
>i tried again.

Douglas Purdy:
>rose never would have worked for you.

Douglas Purdy:
>i asked a bunch of times.

Michael Vernal:
>Ok, let me try again.

Douglas Purdy:
>you have your model.

Douglas Purdy:
>i am not giving you data you believe.

Douglas Purdy:
>ok.

Michael Vernal:
>Going back ~6-12 months ago, it became clear to me that I had two separate beasts in platform -- this open graph stuff, and this developer platform stuff. And they were different.

Michael Vernal:

>It was always clear to me that open graph would merge into search, and that the dev platform stuff was the true/core platfor.

Michael Vernal:

>In my ideal world, you and Vlad were the PM and Eng lead for platform, with you eventually taking total ownership. This is why I say I tried to empower the two of you in this way, and why I say I wasn't micro-managing this stuff.

Douglas Purdy:

>if you are putting me with vlad you have to micromanage it.

Michael Vernal:

>I also tried to be clear that Open Graph was where I was going to focus my IC efforts, to get it strategically bootstrapped and then to integrate it with Search.

Douglas Purdy:

>i told you that.

Michael Vernal:

>Ok, well then can you answer my question - if I had fired Vlad/moved him to another team, would this have all worked?

Michael Vernal:

>I've asked three times.

Michael Vernal:

>Anyway - going back - I asked / offered to take Rose/Avichal as a direct report, so you could focus on the platform stuff. In the platform narrative, I kept saying there was this top-level split between Open Graph and Dev Services, and you kept erasing that -- making Open Graph the second of four pillars. Etc.

Michael Vernal:

>My read of the situation is that I should have:
>

Michael Vernal:

>- Taken Rose/Avichal
>- Pushed Vlad to another team
>- Gotten you another eng peer
>
>And then this might have worked.

Douglas Purdy:

>perhaps for this instance, but i will assert this more than just vlad and i. i think there is a general pattern of too many cooks, not enough clarity of ownership unless things it your or zuck's level.

Douglas Purdy:

>only you could rally the team for SLAs.

Douglas Purdy:

>i have been saying it for 3 years.

Douglas Purdy:

>or nearly that.

Douglas Purdy:

>so that is a question...

Douglas Purdy:

>how would you have empowered me to do the platform simplification?

Douglas Purdy:

>or f8?

Michael Vernal:

>Didn't you do some mini-f8 in the spring?

Michael Vernal:

>How did you do that?

Douglas Purdy:

>that isn't d8.

Douglas Purdy:

>f8.

Michael Vernal:

>Did I tell you to do that? Not to do that?

Douglas Purdy:

>i have done a bunch of devcons.

Douglas Purdy:

>i came here to do f8s.

Douglas Purdy:

>i have done PDC, TechEd and MIX keynotes.

Michael Vernal:

>Why do you always go back to credentials?

Douglas Purdy:

>this is about growth

Douglas Purdy:

>new experiences.

Michael Vernal:

>I don't think so.

Douglas Purdy:

>not what i have done before

Douglas Purdy:

>i am fueled by new experiences.

Michael Vernal:

>Maybe.

Douglas Purdy:

>ask thuy.

Douglas Purdy:

>your model for me is just wrong.

Michael Vernal:

>I'm sure you believe that you are fueled by new experiences.

Douglas Purdy:

>and you are smart enough to know what is fueling me.

Douglas Purdy:

>based on the few minutes a week we spend together.

Michael Vernal:

>Anyway - I've got to go to bed.

Michael Vernal:

>We can talk about this some other time. If you have tips on how I can empower someone like Scott or someone similar, that would be useful.

Douglas Purdy:

>I am stuck on 101. I'll be there as soon as I can.

Michael Vernal:

>Can you drive getting a better schedule/plan?

Douglas Purdy:

>I am doing it now.

Douglas Purdy:

>We'll have options for you to review tomorrow around noon. That work?

Douglas Purdy:

>API Support Follow-up Data (should send this data to Mark or not?)

>I personally think 3 years is the upper bound of what we can do here based on my own personal experience and what I think should be considered "best in class".

Michael Vernal:

>If you want

Douglas Purdy:

>You free?

Michael Vernal:

>On a plane. What's up?

Douglas Purdy:

>Forgot. Wanted to sync. Had an idea on how to roll this out, that Eddie/Constantin like. We are doing the work to see how soon we can landed it. More later. Had a great meeting with harsh and vish too. Love those guys. So solid.

Douglas Purdy:

>You want to be in he group where we are hashing this out or just want to review on Tuesday?

Michael Vernal:

>I'm out until Thursday next week.

Michael Vernal:

>You guys should just run.

Douglas Purdy:

>You ok if we meet with Zuck again (if we can), provided you review on msg?

Michael Vernal:

>Yeah, if you want and he wants.

Michael Vernal:

>Do you want your review via Messenger/email?

Michael Vernal:

>I'm happy to invest the time to really write it out, or I can give you your letter and hit the high-level points.

Michael Vernal:

>I'll do it via Messenger. Your rating for the last half was "Meets All Expectations." Why I thought that was the case:

>

>Results

>- Neko + Payments doing really well, Deb blossoming

>- Mobile SDK stuff going pretty well

>- Identity + OG stuff going pretty well (but I'm more directly involved there)

>- Took point on closing Parse acquisition (even though a little challenging, now)

>

>People Management

>- Very big on empowering people; people universally appreciate this

>- Generally very strong upward feedback from his folks, even those who are struggling

>- Not always enough coaching; there are people who need more help, who aren't always getting it (Marie, Max)
>
>Dev Advocacy
>- This was a little messy; org was not doing well and probably took too long to deal with it
>- When finally identified as issue, maybe took too long to deal with it
>
>Relationship w/ Me, Vlad
>- Manages me well and tries to help amplify my impact
>- Lots of unnecessary anxiety this half. Good to work through, and was generally professional, but this was a time suck
>
>Your bonus for this half was $61,524.
>
>I'm happy to talk through the details in our next 1:1, but since you asked for this over messenger, wanted to share it.

Douglas Purdy:

>thank you. better than i expected or likely deserved. i know i was a pain in the ass this semester. sorry. you handled it well. i am really struggling on a personal level right now. because i am generally the same person everywhere, it can impact my work.

Douglas Purdy:

>Parse Developer Day. I haven't seen the deck yet. I am encouraging him to send to you (can skip me). i think you and i are in sync.

Michael Vernal:

>I'm out until PDD

Michael Vernal:

>Can you look at?

Michael Vernal:

>I wasn't going to ask what he was going to talk about. I assume Ilya owns it.

Douglas Purdy:

>ok.

Michael Vernal:

>I don't micromanage everything, you know.

Douglas Purdy:

>i would micromanage the message. :-)

Michael Vernal:

>You should do what you think is right.
